

ILY Monster 114

Right after Hinari ended the call, Davi's brain began replaying those questions while her memories with him and her feelings towards him was answering each single one of them with solid yes. And in the end, she realized she actually didn't need to ask herself all. Causing her to only put her hands into her face.

That moment, Davi began to feel unfamiliar feelings emerging inside her. She felt as though, all the feelings she was ignoring like nothing before all appeared at once making her felt she started soaring above the clouds.

Until the cellphone in her hand suddenly beeped and awakened her. She immediately looked at it thinking that it was another mail from Hinari but to her surprise, it was actually Mr. Chen who just messaged her.

She opened it right away and a photo of Sei leaning on the door's frame like a perfect statue as he gazes outside appeared. That moment, Davi couldn't help but smile brightly and the moment she read the caption, she coughed as she suddenly felt like she just wanted to teleport beside him right away.

[A certain lifeless statue waiting for his wife to come home is about to turn into some gloomy scarecrow.]

Meanwhile, at Gray mansion...

Zaki was sitting lazily and looking tired on the sofa. He was watching the gloomy guy who was still having such a sour mood because of the fact that he was not allowed to go and fetch his wife this time.

He was actually standing there for a long time now. He didn't talk nor moved a single inch as though he was dead robot programmed to watch the door.

'Ahh... please your highness, comeback home. It's only you who could bring this guy to life.' Zaki whispered to himself and to his surprise, the man suddenly moved as soon as he uttered those words.

Sei lifted his hand and Zaki could tell that he just received a message. It was his personal cellphone, so it only means it was from his one and only redeemer, his wife.

However, as Zaki looked at him, his brows knitted when suddenly, the man strode towards him with such an unbelievably fast pace.

'Wait... could it be that, there's trouble again?' Zaki uttered as he stood. However, what happened next just made his shoulders fell dramatically and he could only sit again weakly.

Sei showed him his cellphone while looking so troubled. And the moment Zaki looked at the screen, five big dots appeared invisibly above his head. It was because what Sri was showing him was just a sticker of a gray gloomy looking animated cat sent by his wife.

Zaki just looked at him. He just actually doesn't get why he's suddenly showing such thing to him, until the man finally talked.

"What is this thing? Is this some sort of secret message or a code? She just sent me this out of nowhere."

Upon hearing him, Zaki suddenly fell speechless, that he didn't even know where to begin.

Code my ass. God, this monster. I understand you're not even interested in social media, I know you don't even have a single account in any social platforms and that you don't even glance at any of it but... yeah, THIS IS JUST TOO MUCH DAMN IT!

Zaki was erupting deep within him and yet he could only laugh it off. It was because he knew more than anyone else why this man was so damn ignorant with all these things.

"Haha... that thing is not a code or something. It's used to show the senders feeling. You get it?"

"So this mean she's sad... why?"

"How should I know?" Just ask her damn it.

Sei then decided to ask her, but before he could dial her number, another message arrived. This time, it was the same cat but was looking excited as it runs. And before Sei could even react, another one arrived. It was the same cat again, however, it was just standing while holding a gift box.

"Tap it." Zaki said and a second after he tapped it a banner with the words 'I Miss You' popped out, causing Sei to feel frozen as his eyes were just glued unto it.
