

ILY Monster 155

That same moment, a car screeched into a halt just in front of the Gray house. And the next second, Zaki stepped out of the car and he immediately rushed towards the house. He went straight upstairs for the sake of his gossiping stomach and when he reached Davi and Sei's room, he leaned towards the door trying to eavesdrop when to his surprise, he realized that the door wasn't even closed.

Wait... what's this? Something's not right here...

Suspicion immediately carved into Zaki's face so he entered his head to peek inside when his shoulders instantly dropped the moment he confirmed that what he was thinking just now was right.

Tch! What happened? Why is he outside?

Sei was there leaning quietly just beside the bathroom's door. His clothes were changed but as he looked at him, there seemed to be nothing that happened at all. Causing Zaki to walk closer to him with an annoyed look.

"Hey, don't tell me you left her inside." He said and Sei just shut him a glance without saying anything. Confirming that he was indeed right, Zaki's jaw voluntarily dropped with disappointment.

What the hell... does this mean my sacrifices were useless? Do you know how much I suffered just to get you this opportunity?! And you just wasted it? Anyone wants to help me smack this wooden block? Ahh... my hardwork...

"Hey, Sei... How could you just waste the rare opportunity that the heavens were bestowing you? Wait... don't tell me you're not aroused agai---"

"Shut up. That's not the problem here."

"Then why? No matter how I see it, there's no reason for you to hold bac---"

"You... do you still call yourself a man?" Once again, Sei cut through Zaki's words as he glared at him sharply as he continued.

"No reason to hold back? Can't you see she's sick?" he said firmly causing Zaki to just scratch his neck.

"She's not that sick though---"

"Shut up." For the third time, Sei didn't let Zaki to finish his word, causing the man to just sigh and give in as he cried without tears.

I understand you're currently Earth's most innocent, most considerate and the most gentle husband ever but... ahh... this is kind of frustrating...

Greatly disappointed with what happened, Zaki was about to leave when Sei suddenly talked.

"Listen Zaki..." he said as he stared outside the open window with some strange intensity glimmering through his eyes.

"I have decided... I have decided not to touch her... Not until I could finally reveal myself to her." He continued with his absolute and serious voice. Causing Zaki to look at him with disbelief.

"You mean..."

"Mm. I don't want to hurt her again. So this time, I'll make sure to end this nonsense so I can finally tell her everything." He said without averting his gaze away from the window.

That moment, Zaki could tell just how serious Sei was. And he couldn't help but smile with extreme excitement.

Sei... you know I've been waiting for you to get serious again all this time... So your love for her ignited the long dead spirit of yours to rise again huh...

this is getting exciting...

"Should I start preparing myself for an all-out war as early as now?"

"Mm. We will leave tonight."

"Haha... okay, okay, I get it!" Zaki then replied as he hastily walked out the room with such an overwhelming blazing spirit, as though what he just heard was a news he's been waiting for his entire life.

However, before he closed the door, he talked again. "Hey, Sei. Don't forget to settle things with your wife first. Her friend told me that she will never get drunk unless she was hurt so much." He said before he shut the door.

And upon hearing his words, Sei just clenched his fist quietly. That moment, Sei once again realized that there's nothing more painful for him than hearing or seeing his wife getting hurt.