Chapter 928

'The past...' Vicky zoned out for a moment.

Vicky and Tyler had a tumultuous marriage in the past. He rarely came home at night, and this gave rise to the countless scandals he had with other women.

At the beginning of the marriage, he would either come home drunk or smelling of other women's perfume. Vicky even questioned him about the scandals he had with other women, but he shot her down by saying, "You chose this life, so you have no right to question me, Vicky Shaw."

What he said was true. She was the one who broke up with him, and she was also the one who forced him to marry her.

She spent the first year of her marriage being heartbroken and sad everyday. Later, she gradually became numb. She stopped caring about all scandals, and she also stopped looking into whether Tyler cheated on her with the women he was reportedly involved with.

Instead, she turned all of her attention to her job. The best thing for her to do was to treat each other like roommates, she thought. However, after the car accident, she started to have hope things would turn for the better since his attitude toward her gradually changed.

Vicky's eyes became teary, and her voice shook when she asked, "Tyler, didn't you say that you wanted to start over with me and that you want to make the marriage work? Did you change your mind, or did you not mean what you said at all?"

“I didn’t change my mind and I meant every word I said to you, but it doesn’t mean that you can restrict what I can and cannot do without any good reason.”

“Without any good reason?” repeated Vicky in shock. “Don’t tell me...you think I’m being unreasonable right now.”

“Well, aren’t you?”

“How am I being unreasonable when I’m just asking you to keep your distance from those women?”

Tyler’s face darkened, and his voice turned cold. “Vicky, I’ve told you a thousand times, so don’t make me repeat myself.”

It never crossed Vicky’s mind that the two of them would argue because of some random woman.

“Then tell me: what are you going to do from now on?”

“I should be the one asking you that.”

At that moment, Vicky could not help but feel immensely disappointed in Tyler.

“What if I say I want you to give up doing this necessary part of business?”

Tyler looked at her and said, “So you’re saying that you don’t want me to attend any more business events?”

“No... That’s not what I meant...”

“Vicky, you should know very well that this kind of situation is part and parcel of doing business. Besides, my conscience is clear,” Tyler said coolly and calmly.

At that moment, Vicky suddenly felt like Tyler was nothing but a stranger to her.

“Tyler, do you still love me?” she blurted out without thinking.

Time seemed to have become frozen as soon as the question came out.

Vicky waited a long while for him to answer but he never did, and this made her heart cold.

“You...don’t love me anymore, do you?”

After another few seconds of silence, Tyler finally answered, “Vicky, you shouldn’t be so greedy.”

Vicky was stunned, and her breathing became erratic.

“Greedy? Are you seriously calling me greedy? How can you call me greedy when I’m just asking my husband for some love?” she asked.

Tyler’s eyes became cold and distant.

“I’ve done everything as a husband should do. I even cut off contact with the woman you didn’t like, just as you asked me to do. Why are you still not content?”

Vicky understood him to mean that as a man, he could keep a distance from his so-called ‘female bosom friend’.
