The Innocent Wife of Scheming President

Chapter 61: Blinding Bloodstain

His eyes were clouded again, "Girl, it doesn't matter if you don't admit it, but one day I'll make you confess. Although I have been blind, and I have never seen you, you can't deceive me. If you cheat on my feelings, I will make you pay."

He was like an enraged lion, rampaging through her body. He would not have thought of loving a fragrant jade-like maid -- to have a tender heart for the fair sex.

Olive bit her lip hard. She looked at him with disbelief and sadness. Alan, I loved you so passionately. How can you doubt my feelings for you? What do you mean I lied to you? The people around you were really deceiving you.

Olive, I knew you wanted to run away from me, but even if you ran to the ends of the earth, you would never run away from me again in your life.

His slender fingers ran over her face, her eyes and her eyebrows, "don't look at me so innocently. You should regret saving me."

Regret it? She never thought, "I don't know what you're talking about."

Alan patted her face and said, "you just pretend to be stupid. Five years may have passed, but the landlord and the doctor who operated on me may still remember you."

He pulled out his phone and turned on the camera software. In fact, he already had a picture of her on his phone. He's taken from surveillance video. Alan never imagined that he would one day do such a naive thing himself. He felt uneasy.

Olive looked pale and tried to get out of the way, but her hands were tied, her feet were pressed by him, and she couldn't hide from him except by burying her face in a pillow.
