Chapter 1661

"Your Excellency, I am very sorry that we failed your expectations." Minister Frank Knox said with his head down.

Suddenly, President Roosevelt's face quickly turned pale. Although before the start of this naval battle, he had expected that there might be such a result. However, after learning that they really lost, they still couldn't accept such a result.

"How could this be? Isn't our chance of winning great? Why do we still lose?" President Roosevelt asked.

Before the naval battle started, the naval generals told him that the US and British fleets had a great advantage in this naval battle. The chances of winning will be very high. This also gave President Roosevelt a glimmer of expectation. He hopes that the Navy can win this battle. In that case, they will be able to gain more room for maneuver.

Now, the Navy has lost. This immediately put the United States in the most difficult situation.

"Your Excellency, the Navy made a fatal mistake in this naval battle..." Admiral Harold Stark reported to President Roosevelt, and he reported the battlefield to President Roosevelt in detail.

President Roosevelt was completely speechless: "Perhaps, this is God's will! Even God is now on the side of the Germans."

"Your Excellency, after this naval battle, the navy has already existed in name only. In this naval battle, we lost all our aircraft carriers, and only three battleships of the 'Iowa class' remained as capital ships. Cruisers and destroyers, It also suffered heavy losses. The situation of the British is no better than ours. They also only have four "Hood-class" battlecruisers left. The entire Atlantic has completely fallen into the control of the Germans Hit." Admiral Harold Stark continued.

There is no doubt that in this naval battle, the U.S. Navy and the British Navy have lost nothing. After this naval battle, I am afraid that both navies will be devastated. If there is enough time, with its strong industrial strength, there may be a day to revive its glory. But sadly, they simply don't have enough time. The Germans, will not give them time to redevelop the navy.

President Roosevelt's expression became even uglier. He knew what kind of difficulties the entire United States would face next after the navy failed. Next, the Germans are likely to directly attack the continental United States.

"The Germans have completely occupied the Bermuda Islands. Now they have completely seized the command of the Atlantic Ocean. So, their attack on our mainland seems to be imminent?" President Roosevelt said.

"Yes, Your Excellency. It is estimated that the German landing operations are imminent." Admiral Harold Stark said.

"Come on, get General Marshall and General Arnold!" President Roosevelt ordered.

In the event of a complete failure of the navy, the defense of the United States can only rely on the army and the army air force.

Soon, Admiral Marshall and Henry Arnold arrived at President Roosevelt's office. The two of them had obviously heard the news of the complete defeat of the navy, and their faces were also very ugly.

In these years, the United States has invested huge resources and financial resources in order to develop the navy. Now, the navy has failed. This directly put huge pressure on the army and the army air force!

"The navy suffered heavy losses, but what about the Germans? Did they suffer large losses?" Admiral Marshall couldn't help asking. After all, the U.S. Navy and the British Navy lost so much. Especially when they had an advantage and paid such a big loss, the Germans had no reason why the loss would be so small!

Admiral Harold Stark flashed embarrassment and anger on his face: "Four German capital ships were sunk, and three other capital ships were severely damaged. Some cruisers and destroyers were also sunk. The carrier-based aircraft On the one hand, the Germans have lost a lot."

After hearing this answer, Admiral Marshall didn't know what to say. The U.S. Navy and the British Navy lost so much, but they only got the result of the sinking of four battleships of the German Navy and the heavy damage of three battleships of the German Navy. As for the losses of cruisers and destroyers, they were insignificant at all. The Germans can easily make up for the loss of carrier-based aircraft.

"General Marshall, General Arnold. The German navy has won this naval battle, so they don't have to worry about anything else. It is expected that the Germans will launch a landing operation on North America soon. We must Just be prepared." President Roosevelt said with a serious face.

Admiral Marshall and Admiral Arnold nodded.

"Your Excellency, it will be winter soon. Will the Germans launch a landing operation in winter? Such weather may not be suitable for landing operations." Admiral Marshall said.

"Even if the Germans don't launch a landing operation in winter, at least they will launch a landing operation next spring. At that time, we will have to face the powerful German army and air force. If we lose again, the consequences will be disastrous ' said President Roosevelt.

The expressions of several generals are very serious, and they are also very clear that there is only one way before the United States, and that is to use the army to resist the German attack. Even after the German army landed on a large scale, relying on the Army and the Army Air Force to defeat the Germans in one fell swoop. Only in this way, the Germans may give up the destruction of the United States and be able to strive for a decent peace. Otherwise, the United States will most likely cease to exist.

"General Marshall, General Arnold. Next, your mission is very heavy. However, the hope of the country rests on your shoulders. I hope that you can win a crucial victory for the American Republic in future wars." An important victory. After all, it is a matter of life and death for the American Republic!" President Roosevelt continued.

"Yes, Your Excellency the President." Admiral Marshall and Admiral Arnold replied.

At this moment, they also felt the great responsibility. But can they really defeat the Germans in the war? No doubt it was very difficult. The German navy is already very powerful, but the reputation of the German army is greater than that of the German navy. They have directly tore up the huge Russia with the torrent of steel. Could the United States hold off a German attack? Almost everyone does not have the confidence to win.

Chapter 1662

"General Marshall, General Arnold, next we will focus on the Army and the Army Air Force in terms of resources. I only have one request, and that is to win the next war!" President Roosevelt said.

There is no doubt that the next war is a matter of life and death for the United States. The President of the United States will support the Army and the Army Air Force at all costs, and strive to improve their strength in a short period of time. In that case, Germany may be defeated in one fell swoop, thereby forcing Germany to accept their armistice conditions and strive for a decent peace.

As for completely defeating Germany in this war and winning the war, no one dares to think that way. Because that is simply unrealistic. The navy has suffered a complete defeat, and they have lost the ability to attack Germany on the other side of the Atlantic. Not to mention, Germany still has an absolute advantage in this war. It is very difficult to defeat Germany at home, let alone cross the Atlantic to fight on the European continent.

"Yes, Your Excellency the President!" Both Admiral Marshall and Admiral Arnold replied.

Harold? Admiral Stark did not speak on the side. Although he knows that President Roosevelt may transfer many resources originally used for the navy to the army and the army air force in the future. However, he still had nothing to say. Who made the Navy lose so badly? What's more, judging from the current situation, the most important thing is to first support the Army and the Army Air Force, resist the German attack, and even defeat the Germans at home. Only by keeping the United States can the U.S. Navy have a chance to rise again.

After the meeting, Admiral Marshall and Admiral Arnold went straight to the General Staff and called together a group of senior generals from the Army and the Army Air Force to discuss countermeasures.

When the generals of the Army and Army Air Force learned that the navy had suffered a disastrous defeat and that the Germans might soon launch an attack on the continental United States, they were equally dumbfounded. Some people even showed panic in their eyes.

Although the U.S. Navy suffered a disastrous defeat before, it still exists after all. This made them not worried that the German army would launch an attack on the United States. But the situation is different now. After the Germans completely control the Atlantic Ocean, they may soon launch a landing operation on the mainland of the United States, which is undoubtedly a very terrible thing.

"Your Excellency Chief of Staff, we must stop bombing Bermuda now. It is nothing more than a waste of our planes and pilots and crews! Now we need greater strength to defend our homeland, and this must end. Unnecessary waste," said Lt. Gen. Delos Emmons, Army Air Corps Combat Component Commander.

"Yes, Your Excellency the Chief of Staff. The Army Air Corps suffered great losses in the battle against Bermuda. We can't let the troops go on in vain like this." Major General Barney Giles, Chief of Staff of the Army Air Corps also said.

Admiral Marshall nodded. He also believed that it was meaningless to bomb the Bermuda Islands now that the German Navy had won an absolute victory in the Atlantic naval battle. In that case, it will only further damage their strength.

"Then, from now on, let's stop bombing the Bermuda Islands. The Army Air Force will be fully prepared in the future. Once the German army launches a landing operation in North America, the Army Air Force will be our guarantee of air supremacy and the landing of the German army. The main force for the troops to launch an air strike!" Admiral Marshall said.

"Yes, Your Excellency the Chief of Staff." All the generals of the Army Air Corps replied.

In the bombing of Bermuda, the loss of the US Army Air Forces was too great. This is enough to make these generals of the Army Air Corps feel distressed. It is undoubtedly the best thing to be able to stop this kind of meaningless consumption.

"Your Excellency Chief of Staff, winter is coming soon. Judging from the current situation, the Germans should wait until spring before launching a landing. Well, now we still have a few months, enough to build an Atlantic defense line on the east coast, to prevent the Germans from attacking. Even, it can make the Germans smash their heads in front of our defense line!" General MacArthur said.

"I agree with General MacArthur's opinion. We now have an army of 5 million, and we are still recruiting further troops. We have also formed 18 armored divisions for the armored force. Next, we will form more armored forces. Therefore, we have enough strength to build the Atlantic line of defense. It is not so easy for the Germans to cross the Atlantic and land in North America. At that time, we can even gather superior forces to annihilate the German troops landing in North America and completely eliminate them from destroying the United States. The unrealistic idea of the Republic." Major General Eisenhower also said.

Admiral Marshall nodded, the German army was very powerful and brought great pressure to them. But at the same time, they also have great confidence in the US Army. The current U.S. Army is equally powerful. With millions of troops and a huge number of armored forces, it is enough to be regarded as the second strongest army in the world after the German Army.

At the same time, they also have a geographical advantage. No matter how strong the German army is, it is very difficult to project its forces to the west coast of the Atlantic Ocean. This severely restricted the German Army's strength. In this case, it is not impossible for the US Army to defeat the German Army.

"During the War of Independence, the British Empire was also the most powerful country in the world. But after our hard work, we defeated the British and gained independence. Now, history is repeating itself again. We can also Defeat the Germans and win the war." Lieutenant General George Patton also said.

The generals of the U.S. Army gradually became full of confidence in future wars. Even though they know it, the enemy is strong. But they believe that if they do their best, they can also win. After all, the United States is not what it used to be. Huge armored force, various advanced equipment, plus the right time, place and people. The possibility of winning this battle is still very high.

"If everyone has no objections, then we will start to build the Atlantic line of defense. Let the British join in. They are responsible for the section in Canada, and we are responsible for the section in the United States. Now, it has come to a matter of our life and death. Time, Everyone must do their best!" Admiral Marshall said.

"Gentlemen, it is already the end of October. Our landing plan is about to start. However, we have not yet made it clear where we choose as the landing point." German Minister of War and Chief of the General Staff Marshal Manstein Said.

This is a military meeting attended by senior generals of the German army, navy and air force. The key topic of this meeting is the upcoming landing operations in North America.

"This time, we are crossing thousands of kilometers of the Atlantic Ocean and landing in North America. For us, it will be a huge test. Therefore, we have to be fully prepared. Otherwise, this will be a huge challenge for us. Bring a failure." Marshal Raeder reminded.

Although, the German Navy has won a comprehensive victory in the Atlantic naval battle. However, in launching a landing operation against North America, the German Navy also did not dare to take it lightly. This is about Germany's complete defeat of the United States and victory in this war. The navy has to do its best. Otherwise, once this attack fails, not only will Germany suffer heavy losses, but it will even affect everyone's confidence in defeating the United States across the sea. This will have an extremely profound impact on subsequent strategies.

All the generals of the German army, navy and air force nodded repeatedly.

"The Americans have stopped bombing the Bermuda Islands. We have expanded the two airports on the island. The Air Force has sent two fighter jet wings to the Bermuda Islands. Next, we will also build on the island Five airports. In this case, we can send up to a thousand aircraft to Bermuda." Air Force Minister Albert Kesselring said.

"Although Bermuda is a good bridgehead, it is still too far away from the mainland of the United States. The distance of more than 900 kilometers is still a natural barrier. In addition, the area of Bermuda is too small to accommodate large troops." General Georg von K uchler, deputy chief of staff, said.

Indeed, Bermuda is suitable as an air base. The Luftwaffe could use it to take off heavy bombers to bomb the continental United States. The cooperation of long-range fighter jets and heavy bombers can completely include the entire east coast of the United States within the strike radius. Even the most important industrial base in the Northeast of the United States will be within their bombing range. But if you want to start from here and land directly on the mainland of the United States, it will undoubtedly be more difficult.

"Bermuda is really not suitable. If you abandon this direction, there are only two directions. One direction is to go south, land on those islands in the Caribbean Sea, and then find a way to land on the Florida Peninsula or the coast of the Gulf of Mexico. However, The Americans have also been prepared in this direction. They have deployed heavy troops on the islands in the Caribbean Sea. They have also left a huge army on the Florida peninsula. It will be very difficult to make a breakthrough in this direction. Difficult," said Admiral Ernst von Busch, commander of the Marine Corps.

"According to the information we have obtained, the U.S. military has deployed more than one million troops in the Caribbean Sea. In addition, the U.S. Army Air Force has also deployed more than 2,000 combat aircraft on the islands in the Caribbean Sea. In addition, the islands in the Caribbean Sea The location is very complicated. Even if we can gain a firm foothold on one or two islands, we will be attacked by US troops from other islands. If we want to compete with the Americans island by island, it will undoubtedly be It will be very difficult, and the loss of the troops will be very large." Admiral K uchler said.

"Another point is that the Americans have been operating in the Caribbean for a very long time. It is very difficult for us to defeat the Americans there. The price we pay will be very high. In addition, even if we work hard and pay heavy losses , escaped the islands in the Caribbean Sea from the Americans. It is also very difficult to attack the mainland United States from these islands. Although the Strait of Florida is not wide, the Americans have already taken the iron barrel of the Florida peninsula. Even It is about to turn the entire Florida peninsula into a fortress. It is not easy to open up the situation there. What's more, even if you land on the Florida peninsula and then advance northward, it will be very difficult to fight until the United States admits defeat Yes. The South has never been the center of gravity of the United States." Marshal Raeder said.

Marshal Manstein nodded, he understood what everyone meant. In the three directions listed before launching the landing in North America, in fact, everyone is not optimistic about the central direction and the southern direction. Therefore, there is only one direction left in the end, that is, the north direction.

"So, are you optimistic about landing from the north?" Marshal Manstein asked.

"Yes, Marshal. Judging from the current situation, landing from the north is undoubtedly the best choice." Admiral Ernst von Busch said.

"We can directly launch an attack on Newfoundland. After taking Newfoundland, we can directly threaten the mainland of Canada. Whether it is crossing the Gulf of St. Lawrence, attacking the Nova Scotia peninsula, or attacking New Brunswick in Canada The difficulty is relatively small in Ontario. More importantly, we are facing the British in the initial stage of the attack, not the Americans. Compared with the Americans, the strength of the British is undoubtedly weaker. We launched The possibility of a successful attack is relatively greater." Admiral K uchler said.

"The area of Newfoundland is large enough, although the terrain is not flat. But there are still many plains along the coast. We can vigorously build airfields and field airports on Newfoundland. If the supporting facilities can keep up, we can even build a Thousands of combat aircraft are deployed on the island of Finland. In this way, we can take off from Newfoundland and directly support the army. We can even directly attack important industrial centers in the United States.” Air Force Deputy Commander and Strategic Air Force Commander Edward ? Marshal Milch said.

"If we can defeat the United Kingdom, then we can start from Canada and directly attack the strategic center of gravity of the United States. As long as the Americans are defeated in the Northeast of the United States and the Great Lakes area, the Americans will lose most of their industrial base. In that Under the circumstances, apart from surrendering to us, the Americans simply can't hold on." Marshal Raeder also said.

"In this case, let's choose Newfoundland as our landing point!" Marshal Manstein finally decided.

Chapter 1664

"Land in Newfoundland, and then use Newfoundland as a bridgehead to land in Canada. After defeating Canada, launch an attack on the United States. This is a good plan. But, will the Americans be unprepared?" Qin Tian finished reading After the landing plan submitted by the army, navy and air force, they raised their own questions.

"Your Majesty, the Americans will indeed be prepared. However, no matter which direction we launch the landing operation, the Americans will be prepared. At that time, it will be inevitable to fight the Americans head-on. As long as we can land in Newfoundland If the island has a firm foothold, then we have nothing to be afraid of. At that time, we will still have the upper hand if we fight directly with the Americans." Marshal Manstein said.

"The island of Newfoundland covers an area of 110,000 square kilometers. We can build a large number of airfields on the coastal plain. Then use these airfields as bases to launch strategic bombings on American industrial areas, directly weakening the United States' war potential." Air Force Secretary Al Field Marshal Bert Kesselring said.

Qin Tian nodded. If the Luftwaffe could start from Newfoundland, it would indeed be able to include the entire industrial center of gravity of the United States within the strike radius. As long as the industrial area is destroyed, the Americans will have no way to fight against Germany. They can't even produce weapons and equipment. They can't take their lives to fight Germany, can they? Even if he worked so hard, the final result would be to seek his own death.

"Your Majesty, according to the information we have, the British did not deploy many troops in Newfoundland. Originally, they only had one infantry division in Newfoundland. Now, they have only increased to three infantry divisions, fifty thousand It is just the strength of the rest of the people. Moreover, the combat effectiveness will not be much higher. As long as the landing goes smoothly, we will be able to completely take Newfoundland within a week. At that time, even if the Americans and British want to rescue, they will not It's that easy. In winter in North America, transportation will be greatly affected. We can even take this opportunity to launch a landing on the Nova Scotia peninsula. In that case, we can really gain a foothold in North America That's it," Marshal Manstein continued.

Qin Tian knew that the leaders of the army, navy and air force had already reached a consensus on this issue. And a detailed plan has been drawn up.

"Then, are the odds high?" Qin Tian asked.

"Your Majesty, if everything goes well, there is no problem with our success." Marshal Manstein said.

"Okay, let's implement according to your plan!" Qin Tian chose to support.

Subsequently, General Küchler, the deputy chief of staff, introduced the entire landing plan to Qin Tian.

During this landing operation, the three major fleets of the Navy will set off to provide various support for the landing troops. Even the local fleet, although the capital ship formation suffered heavy losses, the three severely damaged capital ships would not be able to participate in the battle for a while. But the eight aircraft carriers of the aircraft carrier formation, as well as numerous cruisers and destroyers, will all participate in the battle.

Various types of warships of the navy will provide fire support for the landing force and protection at sea to prevent them from being attacked by the enemy from the sea. The carrier-based aircraft of the aircraft carrier will also provide air support for the landing force, directly bombing the British army on Newfoundland, and assisting them to quickly capture the entire Newfoundland.

The Marine Corps will be the main force for the landing on Newfoundland. There are now ten divisions in the German Marine Corps. This time on Newfoundland, the Marines would commit five divisions at once. A large number of amphibious assault ships, dock landing ships and tank landing ships will all participate in the attack to ensure that the Marine Corps can quickly win this landing operation.

Once the German Marine Corps has a firm foothold on Newfoundland, the German Army will begin to land on Newfoundland. Army Group A of the German Army will be the first army unit to land on Newfoundland and even North America. After they successfully landed on the Nova Scotia Peninsula, Army Group B and Army Group C will land one after another. Then use powerful armored forces to sweep the British and American troops throughout North America.

Of course, the three armies of the German Army, in addition to maintaining the establishment on the Russian battlefield, will also incorporate more troops. For example, some newly formed group armies will be considered for inclusion. The armies of other German slave countries will also join the battle after the German army successfully lands in North America. In this way, Germany can successfully suppress the U.S. and British troops in terms of military strength, and at the same time control its own casualties. Get the greatest victory in this war at the least cost.

The German Air Force will also be stationed in Newfoundland for the first time. After a large number of field airports and regular airports are built, the strategic air force's long-range fighter jets and heavy bombers will also be stationed, officially centered on Newfoundland, to launch a strategic bombing of the industrial center of the United States, completely destroying the industrial strength of the United States, thus Create more favorable conditions for Germany to win the war.

Qin Tian was satisfied with the landing operation plan submitted by the army, navy and air force, and did not raise any objections.

However, then he made a suggestion.

"I think, before we officially land in Newfoundland, we can scare the Americans and make it look like we are going to land in the Caribbean with Bermuda as the center. As long as we make it more realistic, we won't be afraid that the Americans won't be fooled. At that time, our landing in Newfoundland would undoubtedly be much easier." Qin Tian said.

The marshals and generals of the German Army, Navy and Air Force could not help but shine. Although launching a deception tactic will consume a lot of resources. But if the American attention can be successfully drawn to the south, it will be very helpful to the victory of the entire landing operation. Even, it will directly increase the chance of winning.

The German Army General Staff subsequently formulated a plan of deception. And, in mid-November, the whole plan started to be implemented.

The German Navy's Atlantic Fleet and Mediterranean Fleet returned to the waters of Bermuda once again after replenishing their carrier-based aircraft. Even the German Marine Corps and Army assembled in large numbers to Bermuda. The Luftwaffe even dispatched many long-range fighter jets to the Caribbean Sea for reconnaissance. Everything seems to be preparing for landing.

Germany's move immediately attracted the attention of the United States. Even many US military generals believed that the Germans were preparing to attack the Caribbean Sea.

Chapter 1665

"Your Excellency, the Chief of Staff, the Germans have assembled quite a strong force in Bermuda. Their Atlantic Fleet and Mediterranean Fleet have already appeared in the nearby waters. According to the information we have obtained, at least one Army Group Army has already landed. In addition, more troops are embarking in western European ports. It can be concluded that their target is still Bermuda. There are all signs that the Germans will soon launch an attack on the Caribbean Sea." Admiral MacArthur looked worried.

Before, Admiral MacArthur served as the commander of the US military in the Philippine Islands. However, after the United States voluntarily ceded the Philippine Islands to the island country, the US troops stationed in the Philippine Islands by Admiral MacArthur withdrew home. Now his position is the commander of the US military in the Caribbean.

Although, the army under the command of Admiral MacArthur is already very large. But when the German army made the appearance of attacking the Caribbean Sea, he still felt that he did not have enough troops and was not strong enough, and he was afraid that he would not be able to withstand the German attack.

Admiral Marshall frowned tightly. They originally judged that the German army would not launch an offensive until next spring. But now, the actions of the German army have exceeded their expectations.

"Are the Germans really planning to attack the Caribbean? Will this be another German trap?" Major General Eisenhower asked.

"Trap? How is that possible? The Germans have already deployed heavy troops on the Bermuda Islands. If they don't want to attack the Caribbean Sea, they want to directly attack our homeland. However, it is too difficult to attack our homeland. Germany People also know that we have deployed heavy troops along the Atlantic coast. Therefore, it is certain that they chose to attack the Caribbean Sea." Admiral MacArthur said.

"Bermuda is not close to the Caribbean Sea. It is not so easy for the Germans to land on those islands in the Caribbean Sea. Especially since we have deployed millions of troops in the Caribbean Sea, and there are more than 2,000 aircraft Combat aircraft," Admiral Arnold said.

"Yes, we have indeed deployed heavy troops in the Caribbean Sea. But don't forget, these troops are scattered on various islands. Among them, more than half of the troops are deployed in Cuba. The rest of the troops are scattered on various islands .Once the Germans launch an attack, we are very likely to be defeated by them one by one." Admiral MacArthur insisted.

"Everyone, is it possible for the Germans to launch an attack in the Caribbean?" Admiral Marshall asked.

"Your Excellency, Chief of Staff, we have to guard against this. If the Germans win in the Caribbean Sea, then they can use those islands in the Caribbean Sea as a springboard to launch a landing operation on the Florida Peninsula or the southern United States. In that case , they will face much less difficulties." Lieutenant General Delos Emmons said.

Admiral Marshall frowned and thought for a while, and then said: "If this is the case, then we will send another 500,000 reinforcements to the Caribbean Sea. The Army Air Force will find a way to send another 1,000 combat aircraft to the Caribbean Sea."

"Yes, Your Excellency the Chief of Staff." The generals replied.

Admiral MacArthur had a happy expression on his face. After adding 500,000 troops and thousands of combat aircraft, this will greatly increase his strength. If the German army really wants to launch an offensive in the Caribbean, he also firmly believes that it can withstand the German attack. Even, it was able to defeat the German offensive in one fell swoop. In this way, he can become an American hero. Obtaining further promotion and stepping up to a higher position is no longer a dream!

"Your Excellency Chief of Staff, if we deploy another half a million people to join the Caribbean Sea Defense Zone, then we will have assembled more than 2.5 million troops in the Caribbean Sea, the Florida Peninsula and the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, which will almost account for our Half of the current strength is reached. And our Atlantic line of defense has not yet been completed." Major General Eisenhower reminded.

The expression on Admiral Marshall's face suddenly became more serious.

"Is our recruiting going well?" Admiral Marshall asked.

The news of the disastrous defeat of the U.S. Navy was not able to hide it in the end, and it was soon known by the entire American society. This caused an uproar in the entire American society. Everyone believed that the United States might lose in this war.

However, under the government's vigorous propaganda, there are still a lot of American youths flocking to the conscription points, signing up to join the U.S. Army and the Army Air Corps, and contributing their strength to the next war.

"Your Excellency Chief of Staff, the recruitment work is going very smoothly. In the past two weeks, we have recruited 1.5 million soldiers. However, they still need to receive systematic training before they can truly join the army. In addition, The production of weapons and equipment must also be stepped up. We lack large-caliber artillery, tanks and armored vehicles, etc.." General Marin Craig, chairman of the Army Reserve Committee, said. They are responsible for the recruitment and training of recruits in the U.S. Army.

"Speed up the training and equipment of the troops. Try to let the major military enterprises speed up the production. Provide us with more weapons and equipment!" Admiral Marshall said.

"Yes, Your Excellency the Chief of Staff." Admiral Marlin Craig and Lieutenant General Brian Somerville, who was in charge of logistics, replied.

"Everyone, in view of the fact that the Germans are very likely to launch a landing operation on North America earlier than we expected, we must further intensify our preparations. We must not only reinforce the Caribbean Sea, but also speed up the construction of the Atlantic defense line. In addition, the construction of new armored units must also be accelerated. By then, we must have enough armored units to withstand the torrent of steel from the Germans!" Admiral Marshall ordered.

"Yes, Your Excellency the Chief of Staff." All the generals replied.

Although, the strength of the U.S. Army has been greatly improved compared to before the war. But there is undoubtedly still a long way to go before resisting the German attack. Especially in terms of armor strength, the M26 heavy tank has already started mass production, and the matching M5 light tank has also started mass production. However, the main force of the US Army's armored forces is still a large number of M4 medium tanks, M3Lee medium tanks and M3 light tanks. It is undoubtedly very difficult to fight against the "Tiger and Leopard Tank" of the German army.

Facing the threat of the German army's imminent landing operations, the entire U.S. Army and Army Air Forces, as if they were facing an enemy, tried their best to prepare for war.

"Your Excellency, please rest assured that we have strengthened the deployment of troops in the Caribbean Sea. If the Germans want to invade the Caribbean Sea, they will definitely have their heads broken. In addition, we have also strengthened Florida The defense of the peninsula and the southern United States. Even if the Germans take the Caribbean with heavy losses, they will never even think about landing on the mainland of the United States. When necessary, we can even lay mines in the Strait of Florida to completely prevent the Germans from landing." Enter Marshall Will confidently report to President Roosevelt.

President Roosevelt nodded, although the current situation seems a little critical. But he is quite satisfied with the disposal plan of Admiral Marshall and others. Germany did gain the upper hand in this war, and even the United States was almost out of breath. However, it is undoubtedly impossible for Germany to defeat the United States in this way. Even without the navy, the United States still has a powerful army and army air force. They still have enough strength to fight the Germans again.

What's more, this war will be fought in the United States. No matter which aspect it is, the United States has a very large advantage. This is why President Roosevelt is full of confidence in the next war.

"What about the Atlantic line of defense? How long will it take to stabilize?" President Roosevelt asked.

With the navy almost wiped out, President Roosevelt hoped to build a steel defense line on the east coast of the United States to completely resist the German attack. Only in that way will the security of the United States be guaranteed. As long as it can be dragged on until the Germans can no longer fight. When the time comes, they will be able to obtain a decent peace.

Although, President Roosevelt's previous goal was to kill Germany and * the throne of world hegemony from under the Germans. But the current situation is not good for them, so President Roosevelt's goal is changed to hope that the United States can continue to exist. Otherwise, once the United States is completely defeated by Germany, the United States may not be able to continue to exist.

"Your Excellency, within a month at most, the Atlantic defense line will be able to initially have combat effectiveness. Soon, winter will come. By then, the Germans will not brave the severe cold to launch an attack. And we still have enough time to come to stabilize the line of defense. The longer the delay, the better for us!" Admiral Marshall continued.

"General Marshall, the fate of the United States is in the hands of the Army. I hope that the Army can win this battle. The entire American Republic will do its best to support you." President Roosevelt said.

"Yes, Your Excellency the President." Admiral Marshall nodded heavily.

Admiral Marshall can also understand that at the last moment of life and death, the entire American society has indeed erupted with the most powerful force. Young people joining the army from all over the country are very enthusiastic. The major arsenals even produce various weapons and equipment in three shifts. Especially after the supply to the navy was stopped, a large amount of resources were used in the production of the army's weapons and equipment, which made the US Army and the Army Air Force begin to quickly receive weapons and equipment. Now their headache is no longer the lack of weapons and equipment, but the lack of personnel. After all, although there are many people joining the army, there are some technical arms. It also takes enough time to develop.

But even so, General Marshall believes that the current U.S. Army is becoming stronger and stronger. Their military strength is getting stronger and stronger, and these will become an important guarantee for them to win against Germany.

"Your Majesty, the Americans were really frightened. They urgently dispatched troops to reinforce the islands in the Caribbean Sea, and at the same time strengthened the defense of the southern United States. It can be said that the Americans have devoted their main force to the south." Marshal Manstein said. face smile.

After the German intelligence agencies learned about the movements of the United States, the generals of the German army were very happy. They believed more and more that although the next landing battle had not yet started, they had already won more than half of it.

Qin Tian nodded: "The Americans have been mobilized, so it is more likely for us to take Newfoundland. How is the preparation of the troops?"

"Your Majesty, General Busch has set off with three marine divisions. The other two marine divisions are still confusing the Americans in the waters near Bermuda. After the attack on Newfoundland begins, they will immediately go north for reinforcements. Also in the The 1st Army of the Bermuda Islands will also go north by boat immediately. It only takes two days for them to arrive at Newfoundland." Marshal Manstein said.

The British did not pay attention to the defense of Newfoundland, and only three infantry divisions have been deployed on Newfoundland. Even if there were only three divisions of the first marines to land, it would be enough to crush them.

"The local fleet will provide fire support for the marines landing on Newfoundland. In addition, the capital ship formations of the Mediterranean Fleet and the Atlantic Fleet will also rush to Newfoundland one day in advance. However, I am afraid that they will not be able to catch up until the second day of the battle." Yes. However, the British did not have a decent defense on Newfoundland. Therefore, the carrier-based aircraft of the home fleet and the firepower of the cruisers are enough to provide sufficient fire support for the Marine Corps." Marshal Raeder also said .

While there is no capital ship's guns to provide fire support to the marines, the cruiser's main guns are the same. As long as you don't eat those fortresses, the 210mm main gun of the heavy cruiser is still very scary. Enough to tear any enemy to shreds. What's more, the fire support of carrier-based aircraft is more direct. The full dispatch of the local fleet is enough to ensure that the marines will receive sufficient fire support when they attack Newfoundland.

"Is the Air Force ready?" Qin Tian asked.

"Your Majesty, the Air Force will urgently dispatch a group of engineers to Newfoundland to expand the airport on Newfoundland and then build more airports on the island. However, the Air Force's engineering troops are limited, so they need support from the Navy and Army." Support. Once the airport is built, we can take off directly from China to Newfoundland. Then use Newfoundland as a base to start strategic bombing of the United States." Marshal Albert Kesselring said.

Compared with the navy and army, the air force enters the battle a little later. There is no other way around this. To deploy the Air Force to the front line, it needs an airport. Especially heavy bombers need regular airports. And building an airport takes time. Fortunately, Germany has everything ready.

Chapter 1667

On November 21, the weather in the North Atlantic has become very cold. Especially on the sea, the wind is biting. The cold wind seemed to freeze people to death at any time.

A huge fleet is sailing in the North Atlantic. This fleet not only includes eight huge aircraft carriers, but also many amphibious assault ships with direct decks.

In order to ensure the smooth landing of Newfoundland this time, the German Marine Corps also took out the main force. Admiral Ernst von Busch, the commander of the Marine Corps, personally commanded the landing. Three marine divisions were invested in the first place, and then two more marine divisions will enter the battlefield. The number of amphibious assault ships invested has reached 12. In addition, there are dozens of dock landing ships and tank landing ships. Ensure that as many troops as possible can be sent to Newfoundland in one go.

Although, in terms of strength, the three marine divisions of the German army are not much more than the three infantry divisions of the British army on Newfoundland. But they were confident that they could easily defeat the three British infantry divisions on Newfoundland. After all, the soldiers of the German Marine Corps were originally elite. In addition, it is well equipped, not only equipped with amphibious tanks, but also supported by helicopters. There is also fire support from the main guns of battleships on the sea and carrier-based aircraft. This makes them armed to the teeth. Under such circumstances, it would not be a big problem to defeat the British army stationed in Newfoundland and completely take Newfoundland.

On the aircraft carrier "Poseidon", the flagship of the Home Fleet, Marshal Lütjens is talking with Admiral Busch.

Although, the local fleet suffered a lot in the last naval battle. The entire capital ship formation can be regarded as existent in name only. The three heavily damaged battleships are still being repaired on the berth. Most of the carrier-based aircraft force was also lost. However, Marshal Lütjens was in a very good mood. After all, they won and won the naval battle. Although the loss was a bit greater, they gained even greater results. Marshal Lütjens was also commended. The lost carrier-based aircraft were also replenished immediately. Even without the capital ship formation, the current local fleet is still very strong and should not be underestimated.

"General Busch, are you ready?" Marshal Lütjens asked.

Now the fleet is not far from Newfoundland, and it will be able to reach the scheduled sea area in two days.

"Your Excellency, Marshal, we are ready. As soon as we reach Newfoundland, we can launch an attack." Admiral Ernst von Busch has firm confidence in his troops. He firmly believed that they could easily land on Newfoundland, defeat the British army on the island in one fell swoop, and successfully capture the entire Newfoundland.

Marshal Lütjens nodded: "That's good. Your Majesty attaches great importance to this landing. Even whether we can successfully take Newfoundland is related to the next landing in North America. Everyone They all hope to take Newfoundland in the shortest possible time and at the lowest cost."

Ernst von Busch Admiral nodded. It was precisely because of this that he was under tremendous pressure. However, even so, General Ernst von Busch is confident in completing the task this time.

"Your Excellency, Marshal, please rest assured. I have great confidence in our Marine Corps. They will definitely defeat the British this time." Admiral Ernst von Busch's words already carried With a trace of assurance.

"General Busch, of course I believe you. This time, the local fleet will provide you with all-round support. Before landing, we will dispatch carrier-based aircraft and heavy cruisers to attack the British * military targets on the island. And, after the landing, the Marine Corps can call the carrier-based aircraft to provide you with air support at any time by radio." Marshal Lütjens continued.

"Yes, thank you Marshal. With the support of the local fleet, it will be easier for us to defeat the British." Admiral Ernst von Busch said with a smile.

Although the strength of the Marine Corps is very strong, even without the support of the local fleet, Admiral Ernst von Busch believes that they can capture Newfoundland. But that would take a lot of time. At the same time, casualties will increase. More importantly, it would create an opportunity for the enemy to reinforce Newfoundland.

You don't need to think about it, once the British learn that the German army is attacking Newfoundland, they will definitely send reinforcements to Newfoundland immediately. This also requires the German army to take Newfoundland in the shortest possible time.

Even, it is necessary to rely on the local fleet to dispatch ships and carrier-based aircraft to block the Gulf of St. Lawrence and prevent the British army from reinforcing Newfoundland. Therefore, the support of the local fleet is indispensable.

"General Busch, during this landing, is there anything else that needs to be done by the local fleet? You are the main force for this landing. If you need any support, just ask!" Marshal Lütjens said.

He knew that after the last naval battle, the Navy's mission in the Atlantic Ocean was about to change. They are no longer the protagonists, but have become supporting roles.

Of course, all of this is for Germany to win this war. Whether it is the main character or the supporting role, it is very important.

"Your Excellency Marshal, I hope that after our attack begins, the home fleet can strengthen the blockade of the Gulf of St. Lawrence." Admiral Ernst von Busch said.

Marshal Lütjens nodded. Although, blocking the Gulf of St. Lawrence may take certain risks for the local fleet. But, they have to do it.

The Gulf of St. Lawrence is relatively narrow. Once the ships of the local fleet enter it, they will inevitably be attacked by the Royal Navy. Although the main force of the Royal Navy has been wiped out, they still have some cruisers and destroyers, and even submarines and torpedo boats.

"During the day, we will dispatch carrier-based aircraft to block the Gulf of St. Lawrence. At night, we will send cruisers and destroyers into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Even submarines will enter it. The British want to support Newfoundland through the Gulf of St. Lawrence Island, that's impossible!" said Marshal Lütjens.

"Your Excellency, Marshal, I feel relieved in this case." Admiral Ernst von Busch smiled.

After receiving the guarantee from Marshal Lütjens, his heart finally returned to his stomach, and he became more confident about the next landing operation.

On November 23, at two o'clock in the morning, the aircraft carrier formation of the German Navy's home fleet was less than 200 kilometers away from Newfoundland. However, the aircraft carrier formation will not continue to move forward. This distance is undoubtedly a relatively safe distance for them.

But the huge amphibious fleet is still moving on. In order to provide sufficient fire cover for the landing of the Marine Corps, the Home Fleet specially dispatched a fleet of cruisers and destroyers to accompany them in action. When the Marine Corps lands, they will provide the Marine Corps with the most direct naval gun fire support. Even after nightfall, they will enter the Gulf of St. Lawrence to prevent the British from sending reinforcements to Newfoundland at night.

Now the British Army does not have many troops on Newfoundland. So what is certain is that once the British side learns that the German army will attack Newfoundland on a large scale, it will definitely try its best to increase troops to Newfoundland.

During the day, it can also be intercepted by the carrier-based aircraft of the local fleet. But at night, you can only count on the navy's warships.

It was 6 o'clock in the morning, and the sky was still not bright. However, the formation providing fire support to the Marine Corps has already arrived off the coast of Newfoundland. However, the British army on Newfoundland was not clear about this. Although, the British army built air search radars and sea search radars on Newfoundland. But the area of Newfoundland is not small, and it is impossible for the British to build sea search radars everywhere.

This time, the place where the German marines landed first was not St. John, the largest city on Newfoundland, but Tripesy in the south of the Avalon Peninsula.

Although St. John has a large port, if the German army takes St. John, it will be easier to land. But at the same time, the British army directly deployed an infantry division in St. John's. In Tripesy, the British army had only one infantry brigade, with a total strength of just over 4,000 troops.

British infantry divisions do not have regiments. Below the division is the brigade, and below the brigade is the battalion.

Tripesi also has a small port. If the German army captures this place, they can easily disembark from here. Even all kinds of large equipment can be disembarked. If necessary, the German Marine Corps can also expand the port of Tripesi, so that the port can meet the needs of the German landing.

In addition, Tripe West is only 50 kilometers away from St. John's. Once the German marines landed at Tripesy, they could easily follow the road to St. John's and take it in one fell swoop. At that time, the port of St. John's will naturally fall into the hands of the German army.

"How long will it take for the Marine Corps to arrive?" asked Rear Admiral Charles, commander of the artillery formation.

"General, the Marine Corps will arrive here in an hour." A staff officer replied.

"Very well, order the ships to start attacking and destroy the British military installations near Tripesi!" Major General Charles ordered.

"Yes, General."

After the order was conveyed, the artillery formation immediately began preparations. The entire formation consists of 6 heavy cruisers, 9 light cruisers and 16 destroyers. Although, the artillery formation does not have large-caliber naval guns. But the target they have to deal with is not the fortress. Therefore, the cruiser's 210mm main gun and 150mm main gun are actually enough. Even the destroyer's 105mm naval gun is barely enough.

"Fire!"

With the order of the gunner, the artillery formation began to attack.

"Boom! Boom! Boom!"

Orange red flames shone at the muzzle, and the shells roared and hit the beach one after another.

Six heavy cruisers began to attack the coast with 210mm main guns.

Soon, the 150mm main gun of the light cruiser and the 105mm naval gun of the destroyer were also joined.

For a while, the sound of artillery rumbled on the sea, as if it was thunder.

The entire coast of Tripesi has been engulfed in a sea of flames.

The sudden and violent shelling completely confused the British troops stationed here. It probably never occurred to them that the shells would fall on their heads.

"God! We are under attack. The Germans are shelling us heavily, and we need reinforcements!" The commander of the 2nd Infantry Brigade of the 3rd Infantry Division of the British Army stationed here yelled in horror.

The artillery shells falling from the sky are destroying their positions, and even the barracks have become the target of heavy shelling by the German fleet. Many British soldiers were bombed to death in their sleep.

The surviving British soldiers scattered and fled before they even had time to put on their clothes and trousers. The entire British infantry brigade fell into chaos, let alone organized a powerful counterattack, preparing to prevent the German army from landing.

Under the firepower of the German Navy's artillery formation, the British infantry brigade suffered heavy losses.

Of course, there are quite a few people who were actually killed or injured by the bombing. But within an acceptable range. More people were frightened and fled in all directions. If the British army wants to reorganize resistance, it may be very difficult and even take a long time.

At 7 o'clock in the morning, the 3rd Division of the German Marine Corps rushed to the battlefield first.

Helicopters began to take off from the amphibious assault ship and the dock landing ship. The first to take off are armed helicopters. Dozens of armed helicopters flew to Tripesy and began to use heavy machine guns and rockets to continue to attack the British troops stationed there.

At the same time, the Marine Corps dispatched a large number of landing craft and began to rush towards the shore.

Aboard amphibious assault ships and dock landing ships, utility helicopters and transport helicopters are also starting to take off. They will adopt the method of air landing to cooperate with the landing operations of the Marine Corps.

"Shhhhhh!"

A helicopter gunship was firing at a stronghold garrisoned by the British army, and several rockets hit the stronghold accurately. The entire stronghold was blown up into a sea of flames.

"God! The firepower of the Germans is too strong, we can't resist their attack at all!"

"We are under fire from sea and air, we need reinforcements!"

The British troops garrisoning Tripesy quickly began to fail.

Utility helicopters and transport helicopters of the German Marine Corps began to send the Marines to Tripesy.

At the same time, the landing craft also washed up on the beach. A large number of marines, under the cover of their own helicopter fire, attacked Tripesi.

Farther away, the tank landing ship is also heading to the coast. Amphibious tanks are ready for landing.

Under the three-dimensional offensive of the German Marine Corps, the British army could not resist it at all.

Chapter 1669

"Boom boom boom!"

St. John, there was a knock on the bedroom door of Lieutenant General Campbell, commander of the British Command in Newfoundland.

Two minutes later, Lieutenant General Campbell, in his pajamas, opened the door with sleepy eyes.

"Hey, buddy, you'd better tell me something urgent has happened!" Lieutenant General Campbell's tone was full of bad intentions.

"General, Tripesy was heavily bombarded by the enemy, and the troops stationed there suspected that the Germans would land from there." The adjutant reported to Lieutenant General Campbell with a look of panic.

"What? The Germans? Attacking Tripe West? How is that possible?" Lieutenant General Campbell was stunned.

"General, this is absolutely true news." The adjutant said.

"Damn, why did the Germans attack Tripe West? Didn't the War Department just tell us that we are safe here? Bastard, we were deceived again." Lieutenant General Campbell was furious.

On Newfoundland, there are only three infantry divisions. Although I don't know how many troops the German army dispatched, it is obviously not something they can resist. Originally, the War Department planned to send five infantry divisions and one armored division to Newfoundland. However, after the German army made a gesture of attacking the Caribbean Sea, the source increase plan was suspended. Apparently, the British War Office did not consider it necessary to send too many troops in Newfoundland. But now, the Germans are obviously fooling them. Their real attack target was actually Newfoundland.

"General, what should we do now?" the secretary asked.

"Immediately report to the War Department that we are under heavy attack from the Germans and they are about to land in Newfoundland. We need air support and more troops. Otherwise, Newfoundland cannot be held." Campbell The lieutenant general ordered.

At this time, it is undoubtedly the most important to request reinforcements from the country. Only with enough reinforcements may it be possible to withstand the German attack.

"Also, let the 3rd Infantry Division assemble its forces towards Tripesi, and must hold off the German attack. Tell the 3rd Infantry Division, 2nd Infantry Brigade, to stand firm and not retreat without orders. Let the 2nd Infantry Division Enter a state of emergency combat readiness to prevent the Germans from attacking St. John's. If the Germans attack St. John's, if they can't hold it, they can even blow up the port, and the port cannot fall into the hands of the Germans. Let the 4th Infantry Division Standby, ready for reinforcements at any time!" Lieutenant General Campbell ordered.

There are only three infantry divisions on Newfoundland, so he can only pin his hopes on these three infantry divisions. As for whether it can withstand the German attack, it depends on whether the reinforcements can arrive in time.

Anyway, Lieutenant General Campbell has no confidence in this battle. After all, since the Germans have deliberately launched this offensive, they will obviously not give up until they achieve their goals.

However, Lieutenant General Campbell soon got the news. German marines have taken Tripesy. The British Army's 2nd Infantry Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, has been routed.

While Minister of War David Magson was having breakfast, the secretary rushed over.

"Is there anything urgent?" David Magson asked after drinking the milk in his hand.

"Your Excellency, Newfoundland is under attack. General Campbell believes that the Germans are likely to land there." The secretary reported.

"What? The Germans will land in Newfoundland, how is that possible?" David Magson was stunned as if struck by lightning.

"Lieutenant General Campbell reported that." The secretary said.

"Asshole, aren't the Germans going to attack the Caribbean? How could they attack Newfoundland at this time?" David Magson cursed.

But then, his face became very ugly. Because he knew that maybe this time they were fooled again.

"Damn it, this is a trap. The Germans pretended to attack the Caribbean Sea, but it was just a show. In fact, their goal is Newfoundland. Prepare the car, I'm going to see the Prime Minister!" David Ma Gerson ordered.

"Yes, Your Excellency." The secretary immediately went to make arrangements.

When David Magson arrived at the Prime Minister's Office, Churchill was already waiting for him. On Prime Minister Churchill's face, there was also an unconcealable worry. Obviously, he also already knew about the attack on Newfoundland.

If the German army attacked the Caribbean, Prime Minister Churchill would undoubtedly be happy to see it. In that case, the powerful Americans will fight the Germans recklessly, and the British will be able to take advantage of it later. However, if the Germans are attacking Newfoundland, it means that Britain will be the first target of Germany's attack. No matter what, Britain will pay a heavy price, or even be destroyed directly.

"Your Excellency, Prime Minister, I'm afraid we have been fooled again. The German attack on the Caribbean Sea is just a cover. Their real goal is Newfoundland!" David Magson's face was gloomy.

"Is the news confirmed?" Prime Minister Churchill asked.

"Your Excellency, Prime Minister, it should be confirmed. The news I just received shows that the Germans have begun to land. Our troops in Tripe West have not been able to withstand the German attack. The entire Tripe West has fallen into Germany in the hands of others," David Magson said.

Suddenly, Prime Minister Churchill's face became even uglier. The extravagant hope in my heart was completely shattered.

"Come here, immediately summon the cabinet ministers and important military generals to discuss countermeasures!" Churchill ordered.

"Yes, Your Excellency the Prime Minister." The secretary replied.

"In addition, inform the United States of this news. At this time, we need their support!" Prime Minister Churchill said.

If Germany really wants to attack them first, then they have to find a way to get support from the United States. It is obviously impossible to stop the German attack by their own strength.

"Yes, Your Excellency the Prime Minister."

When the British informed the United States of the news, it also caused an uproar in the United States.

After the U.S. Army Chief of Staff, General Marshall, learned the news, a trace of remorse flashed across his face. They were once again fooled by the Germans and deployed their main force to the south. Now, the Germans have landed in Newfoundland. It is clear that they want to defeat Britain first, and then go south from Canada to directly attack the United States!

Equally regretful are the generals of the U.S. Army. Especially those generals who advocated reinforcements in the Caribbean.

Even President Roosevelt was stunned after learning the news.

Chapter 1670

"Gentlemen, how did this happen? Didn't everyone conclude before that the Germans would attack the Caribbean? But now, the Germans have given us another slap in the face! They have actually attacked Newfoundland." President Roosevelt looked very surprised anger.

This is an emergency meeting held by the U.S. Army Staff, and all the main generals of the Army attended this meeting.

The U.S. Army was also shocked to learn that the German army had actually landed in Newfoundland. And it's not just because a lot of people have been slapped. It is even more because the actions of the German army have posed a fatal threat to the United States.

"Your Excellency, I am very sorry. The Germans are too cunning. So, we have all been fooled by them again." Admiral Marshall looked ashamed.

As the saying goes, people cannot fall twice in the same place. However, the United States is already in the hands of the Germans, and has been fooled more than twice. I don't know whether the Germans are too cunning or they are too stupid.

"Your Excellency, it is useless to pursue responsibility now. The most important thing is, how can we resist the German attack? Once the Germans take Newfoundland, we will be even more dangerous ' said Secretary Henry Stimson.

President Roosevelt nodded: "General Marshall, what is the Army going to do?"

"Your Excellency, we must defend Newfoundland. In other words, we must not only resist the Germans' attack in Newfoundland, but also drive them into the sea. Let them have a * blow in Newfoundland. said Admiral Marshall.

President Roosevelt couldn't help but frowned: "Can it be achieved?"

Obviously, President Roosevelt was skeptical about this.

"Your Excellency, we will do our best to achieve it." Admiral Marshall said.

"The Army Air Force will immediately dispatch bombers to bomb the German landing field in Newfoundland." Army Air Force Commander General Henry Arnold said.

"The Americans must have a lot of aircraft carriers near Newfoundland. If the Army Air Force dispatches fighter planes to bomb, they will definitely be intercepted by German carrier-based planes." President Roosevelt said.

"Your Excellency, the Germans have already launched a landing operation in North America. No matter how much the loss is, we have to stop them!" Admiral Arnold's attitude was very firm.

President Roosevelt nodded, now is indeed the time to do our best. The casualties will certainly be great, but no matter how great they are, they have to persevere. Otherwise, once the Germans have gained a firm foothold in North America. At that time, they will pay a greater price.

"How long can the British last on Newfoundland? Is it enough for us to send reinforcements north?" President Roosevelt asked.

"Your Excellency, the British do not have many troops on Newfoundland. According to the news we just received, they only have three infantry divisions on Newfoundland. They promised to increase their troops to Newfoundland before." However, because the Germans seem to be launching an attack on the Caribbean Sea, they will suspend the increase of troops to Newfoundland." Admiral Marshall replied.

"Idiot! Are those British people confused? At this time, they still have luck! Now, it's time for them to suffer!" President Roosevelt was very angry.

But unfortunately, although the British will suffer from it. But at the same time, it will also pull the United States into it!

"Yes, Your Excellency. We have strictly demanded that the British increase their troops to Newfoundland. They are required to resist the German attack in Newfoundland no matter what." Admiral Marshall said.

"The Germans are ready. Even if the British start to reinforce now, it may be difficult to stop the Germans." President Roosevelt sighed.

Admiral Marshall was silent for a while, and then said: "Your Excellency, no matter what, our army must be prepared and go north to reinforce the British. It is impossible to resist the German attack by relying on the strength of the British alone. "

President Roosevelt nodded and adopted the suggestion.

Although the British made a big mistake this time. But the United States cannot sit back and watch Britain and Germany desperately. Because, they know very well that once Britain is finished, it will be their turn next. Everyone understands the reason why the lips are dead and the teeth are cold. Therefore, the United States must reinforce the United Kingdom before the United Kingdom collapses, so that they can persist.

However, although the United States is next to Canada. At the same time, the transportation facilities are also very perfect. It is not difficult to send troops from the United States to reinforce Canada.

However, the main force of the US military is now deployed in the South and the Caribbean. On the Atlantic line of defense, there are still a large number of troops. It will take time to deploy troops now. Also, the weather is very bad right now. There was a heavy snowfall just now, which greatly affected the railway transportation. If the U.S. Army wants to go north to reinforce the United Kingdom, it will take a lot of time.

However, the United States issued the most stringent requirements to the British side. They demanded that the British army quickly reinforce Newfoundland and must resist the German attack in Newfoundland.

At the same time, the U.S. government also promised the British government that the U.S. military will send reinforcements northward to reinforce the British army as soon as possible.

After Prime Minister Churchill received the telegram from the US government, without much hesitation, he issued an order for the British Army to fully reinforce Newfoundland.

Although, some people worry that the so-called reinforcements by the Americans are just a cover, and they actually want to see the United Kingdom and Germany desperately, so that they can take advantage of it later.

But, does Prime Minister Churchill and the British government have any other options? They can only pin their hopes on the timely dispatch of reinforcements by the Americans. Otherwise, once Newfoundland falls into the hands of the Germans, Britain will inevitably bear the brunt of the attack.

Under Churchill's order, the British Army mobilized quickly. Troops deployed in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia began scrambling to board ships for delivery to Newfoundland.

Although the British Royal Navy was almost wiped out. But they also have some cruisers and destroyers, and torpedo boats and things like that. Submarines have some too. There are even more merchant ships. In this case, they can still ensure safety in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

In addition, the Royal Air Force also dispatched a large number of fighter planes to provide them with escort. This made the British Army begin to boldly reinforce Newfoundland with confidence.
