The advance of the German army in India went very smoothly. After the main force of the British Army in India and the British and Indian Army were wiped out, even though the British and Indian Army still had a huge force. In particular, the second round of mobilization by the British and Indian colonial authorities once again mobilized millions of British and Indian troops. This made the British and Indian troops suffer heavy losses on the battlefield, but their total strength did not decrease but increased.

It's just that these British and Indian troops who have just been mobilized to join the army have extremely low combat effectiveness, and they can even be described as garbage. After all, they didn't have any military training, and they didn't even have enough weapons, so they had to share a rifle with two of them. Under such circumstances, how much combat effectiveness can these British and Indian troops be expected to have? Once they enter the battlefield, what kind of performance they will have is naturally conceivable.

In addition, the Congress Party and the Green Party Alliance have parted ways with the British and Indian colonial authorities, which has greatly weakened their strength. Under the attack of the two elite German armies, these British and Indian troops often fled. Before even meeting the Germans, just hearing the news that the Germans were coming, the troops collapsed. It can be seen how low their morale has fallen.

In mid-June 1916, the German Eighth Army captured Calcutta. At the same time, the 4th Army also wiped out southern India. It can be said that the whole of India has basically settled down. At the same time, the lords of the various Indian states have been notified that the German Navy will provide warships and transport them to Germany.

These landlords, this time it can be said that they are in high spirits. Originally, he thought that his own interests would be damaged, and he could not even save his life. But I didn't expect that not only did Germany not harm their interests, but instead gave them land that did not belong to them, which directly made them overjoyed. Although Germany's disposal plan for India has not yet been determined, these landowners have already inquired clearly. The more military expenditures donated, the bet
