

Kidnapped By Rogue Chapter 16 - Tips

0 2 minutes read

Rouge grabbed me by my waist and pulled me in the opposite direction of where Riz held Sarah hostage. "Let her go!" I yelled, clawing at Rouge's hands. Sarah was silently crying, I was screaming like a banshee, and Kenzie was holding her ears while sobbing loudly.

"What the hell is going on," River said when he busted into the kitchen. Everything went silent, and I felt Rouge's grip on me loosen. I took advantage of that and dived for Sarah only to have Rouge grab me again.

"Let go!" I screamed once more, "Leave her alone!" Riz turned his head in amusement before grabbing a hand full of Sarah's hair. She let out a surprised shriek and reached for his grip.

"Hurting her, won't- it won't hurt me," I said harshly and tried to keep my voice from shaking. Riz looked at me and instantly knew I was lying.

"Is that right," he questioned, tightening his grip on her hair. She howled in pain. I again pulled from Rouge's hold on me, but he got me before I could get to Sarah.

I had long forgotten River's sudden appearance until he stood directly in front of me. I tensed, but still struggled against Rouge. River grabbed my face, and I tried to move away, but failed.

"Stop," he commanded, and I gave him a hardened look and continued to squirm. "Stop," he repeated as if I hadn't heard him. I froze.

"I'm glad you've decided to calm down," Rouge said barely loosening his arms around my waist. I glared at River since I couldn't get a look at Rouge.

Sarah's piercing cry caught my attention, causing my squirming to continue where it left off. "Just let her go! Punish me! Leave her alone, please!" I screeched at River whom had let go of my chin and backed up towards Sarah and Riz. When he reached them, he grabbed her and threw her to the floor in front of me. He produced kick after kick into her side, resulting in a cry of pain to sprout from her lips .

“Bastard,” I managed to speak over her shouts. I kicked my legs to get free, but felt something prick me into my neck. I screamed then suddenly calmness captivated me. I was no longer in control of my emotions.

It’s like they were held hostage in my mind. I tried to scream for everyone to leave me alone, leave everything alone. I wanted to cry, to scream. I fell limp in Rouge’s arms as he cradled me into his chest.

“Take her to my room,” Rouge said sliding me into Riz’s grasp. I watched in terror as River continually kicked Sarah until I was whisked out the room.