

Chapter 97

Robert didn't have any favorable feelings for those who had no sense of self-perception.

He especially felt this way toward this kind of job seeker. It was true that as a job seeker, it was fine to ask about the salary, but first of all, it was necessary to know what the job entailed. Shouldn't they first understand whether they were qualified for this position before talking about the benefits?

"You!" The beautiful woman stared at Robert. "You're fucking crazy!"

With that, the woman swung her bag and left.

Robert had been sitting there all morning, and almost everyone who came here asked him a few questions without much intention of applying for the job.

Although the salary was quite high, it was precisely this high salary that stopped some people who wanted to loaf on the job.

And most people thought the job was a scam.

When it was almost lunch, three women approached the booth together.

As soon as these three women appeared, they attracted a lot of attention. In terms of appearance and figure, they were all of the absolute finest quality.

Robert had a slight impression of them as they had been at the job fair the whole morning.

The three women finally came to Robert.

A blonde woman carefully studied Robert's display rack. "Do you have any requirements for the assistant you're recruiting?"

"A minimum of a bachelor's degree is required, and you have to pass the written examination." Robert took out three sets of test papers.

The papers Robert had prepared had a certain level of difficulty.

The blonde woman looked at the test paper and shook her head. "Forget it. It's too troublesome. Why do I have to do a test just to get a job?"

Another woman with curly hair also chuckled the test paper aside. "I don't know if this is legitimate or not. I have to spend at least half an hour on this test. Let's get out of here."

The remaining woman with long black hair was still holding the test paper. After being called to go twice by her friends, she put the test paper down and left with them.

Robert sighed and waited for a while more. Seeing that it was almost time for lunch, he stood up and was about to leave.

"Um, hello. Can I do the test now?"

The woman with long black hair who had just been taken away by her friend hurried back to the booth, a little out of breath.

"Of course." Robert shrugged.

The woman took out her pen and suddenly thought of something. She looked up at Robert and asked, "I have a question. If... I'm just saying if I'm likely to be offered the job, do I have to pay any other fees? For example, training fees?"

"You won't be charged for anything." Robert shook his head.

Hearing this, the woman was completely relieved. She sat in the recruitment space of less than 32 square feet and did the test at a makeshift table.

The curly-haired woman who had just left turned back with the blonde woman and saw Sophia sitting there taking the test. She asked impatiently, "Sophia, what are you doing? Let's go have lunch."

"Are you seriously taking the test? What's the point?"

"Yeah. You don't even know if you'll be accepted. Why do you have to go through so much trouble?"

"And let me tell you. This company is definitely a scam!"

"Such a small space to recruit an assistant to a chairman? Sophia, don't be stupid."

Two women kept trying to persuade Sophia.

Robert looked at them from a corner without saying anything. Anyone who could be persuaded to leave was not the one Robert wanted to find.

Faced with the voices of her two friends, Sophia insisted on filling out the test paper. After handing it to Robert and thanking him, she got up and left.

"Sophia, what were you thinking?"

"I heard that those kinds of assistants are very busy. If you get this job, how can we go clubbing and travel together in the future?"

Chapter 98

"Let's just find a job to make ends meet. After a while, we can each find ourselves a rich young man. Then, we won't need to worry about paying our living expenses."

"Look at both of us. We're going to work as a receptionist at Zabinski Group. We only need to work eight hours a day. We just need to stand at the counter and worry about nothing. We get paid 675 dollars a month. What do you say?"

When the three women left, Robert could still hear the puzzled voices of Sophia's two friends.

Robert shook his head resignedly. Everyone had different choices. Some people chose to live idly in the age where they should strive, while others chose to work hard for their goals.

It was all one's personal choice, and one should not force their choices on others.

However, Robert didn't expect Zabinski Group to have a recruitment booth here. If he had known that, he would not have rented a booth and wasted his money.

Although Robert was not short of money in his pocket, he knew very well that this money was not earned by himself. No matter how much he had, he shouldn't be proud of himself.

Of course, he wouldn't hesitate to spend on those that were necessary. It was just that he needed to keep an upright attitude and not squander the money.

Robert stayed at the booth for the whole day. There were some applicants, but most of them were not serious and were just trying their luck.

So far, Sophia was the most satisfying applicant to Robert. The two friends didn't persuade her to leave, and her written test score was also good.

Robert thought for a while and sent a text message to the phone number left by Sophia, which read, [Hello, Ms. Ryder. You have passed the first round of the written assessment for the vacancy of chairman's assistant. Please go to Grand Triumphant Hotel tomorrow morning at 7 a.m. to participate in the second round of assessment. Please contact me after you arrive.]

After texting, Robert walked out of the job fair.

Meanwhile, Sophia was sitting in a café with her two female friends. When she saw the text message on her phone, Sophia jumped up happily.

"Oh my goodness! I passed the assessment!" Sophia shouted in excitement.

Looking at Sophia's excited face, the blonde woman, Juliette Fox, asked curiously, "What assessment?"

"The application to be a chairman's assistant." Sophia showed her phone to her two friends.

"No way. Sophia, do you really believe that?"

"Yeah, and you have to be there at seven in the morning. Is the person nuts? Which company asks their employees to work at seven in the morning?"

"Sophia, if you ask me, I will suggest you drop your application as the assistant. Come to work as a receptionist with us. We start our work at nine o'clock in the morning and get off work at five o'clock in the evening. It won't affect our fun time after work. We can always go drink and dance."

Sophia listened to the words of her two friends and put away her phone silently. The excitement faltered on her face. "I understand that. Anyway, I have to go back to prepare for the second round of assessment tomorrow."

After Sophia finished speaking, she took the bag and left.

Looking at Sophia walking away, Juliette curled her lips and said, "Does she really think that she's qualified to be a chairman's assistant? It's not an easy job. Wait and see! She will give up in a few days."

"Indeed. Also, the company asked her to do the assessment in a hotel. It must be a scam. I don't know why she wants to entertain them."

"Does she really think that good things will happen to her out of the blue?"

At the job fair, Robert packed up the recruitment brochure and was ready to go back.

"Hey, Robert, you're here, too." A familiar voice sounded.

Robert turned around and saw Jeremy coming from the side. There were several young men beside Jeremy. Robert recognized them as those who had torn his paper in the morning.

"Jeremy, I didn't know that you are also in the job fair. I hadn't seen you for the whole day." Robert stretched out his hand.