

Chapter 28 Na unexpected ally

Hercules walked through the forest, his heavy steps making the branches and dry leaves crunch under his feet. He was furious and his heart was beating fast in his chest, he thought of Eduarda, the young woman he wanted to conquer at all costs. But despite all her efforts, he could never get close to her.

He felt a mixture of anger and sadness, and he couldn't control his rages. As he made his way through the forest, he could see the trail of destruction he had left in his path. Uprooted trees, broken rocks and deep marks in the ground.

Finally, he arrived at his hiding place, a place where he used to go to isolate himself and take out his anger. But, to his surprise, he found there a little boy he had met before. The boy looked at him with admiration and a hint of fear in his eyes.

Hercules asked the boy what he was doing there, and the boy replied that he wanted to be like him, strong and mean. Hercules let out a devilish laugh, which made the boy cringe a little.

"Do you want to be like me, little one?" asked Hercules, smiling.

"Well, I can give you a chance. If you are brave enough to bring another child here for me to sacrifice, I will make you my apprentice."

The boy looked at Hercules, his eyes full of fear and fascination. He knew what Hercules was proposing was wrong, but at the same time, he couldn't help but feel drawn to the power and strength the other man represented.

Hercules could feel the boy's hesitation, so he continued to talk, trying to convince him. "You don't have to be afraid," he said. "With me by your side, you will be stronger and more powerful than you ever imagined. We can rule this place together like kings."

The boy still looked unsure, but he slowly started to approach Hercules. He knew he was about to make a decision that would change his life forever.

"I will do it," he said at last, "I will bring another child here for you to sacrifice."

Hercules smiled,
satisfied: "Very well, young man.
You have just taken the first step towards power and greatness."

The two man and boy stood there, silent for a moment, looking at each other. Hercules knew he had found a new ally,
someone he could mold in his own likeness.
The boy, in turn, knew he had made a dangerous decision. But he also knew there was no turning back. He was trapped in the path of evil, and now he would have to move forward, facing all the consequences of his actions.

Shortly afterwards...

The night was still in the forest when a scream of despair cut through the air. The wolf pack awoke with a start, and the royal guards were hastily called. A baby had been taken from her bed.

The news quickly spread throughout the city, causing panic and fear among the residents.
It was believed that a wolf had broken into the house and taken the child. But what nobody knew is that the person responsible for the kidnapping was Hercules' new apprentice.

The boy, who had joined Hercules in his quest for power and malice, now wept in the dark corner of the hideout. He had watched in horror as the child was sacrificed that had been brought to Hercules, but at the same time, he felt as evil and powerful as his master. It was a strange and contradictory feeling, but he knew he couldn't take it back.

The royal guard began investigating the baby's disappearance, and soon found the trail leading to Hercules' hiding place. They stormed the place with guns drawn, but what they found was a gruesome scene.

The apprentice who was also just one was sitting in the middle of the room, surrounded by candles and strange symbols drawn on the floor. The baby was lying on the altar, its body bloodied and its eyes open, as if it were still looking out at the world.

The new apprentice, still crying and shaking with fear, said disconnected things. He knew he had done something terrible, something that could never be undone. He had crossed the line and joined evil, and now he would have to face the consequences of his actions.

Guards arrested the new apprentice, taking him to the city for trial. But what no one knew is that the seed of evil had already been planted. The new apprentice had tasted the power of evil, and now he was willing to do anything to maintain that sense of power.

The town was in shock over what had happened, and people wondered how a boy who had grown up among them was capable of doing something so terrible.

The evil apprentice had been discovered, but the seed that Hercules had planted continued to grow in his heart, fueled by the desire for power and revenge. And no one knew how far that seed could lead.

And of the things he said only one was understood:

"Hercules the evil king is here"

Those words spread in whispers throughout the pack like a plague.

Meanwhile in the real academy in Erick's room, only moans and whispers of pleasure could be heard, but at one point a chill runs down his spine as if his body senses that his enemy is near. And in the room opposite,

Eduarda's room is silent as she cries but she also feels the same chill and a bad premonition that evil is approaching.

In the forest, the pack gathers around the young apprentice, trying to understand what he means. Some older wolves suggest he must be talking about Hercules, the ancient enemy who had been defeated years ago. But other, younger wolves don't believe

Hercules and begin to question whether the apprentice was telling the truth or just being delusional.

Meanwhile, at the real academy, Erick feels a strong urge to leave the room and go after whatever is causing that shiver down his spine.

But he knows he must control himself and maintain his composure, after all he is the Crown Prince and he must lead by example.

And Eduarda continues crying in her room, feeling a sense of imminent danger. She knows something is wrong, but she can't figure out what it is.

Suddenly, a loud bang echoes throughout the royal academy, causing everyone to startle. The wolves in the forest also hear the noise and start to get agitated.

Erick decides to leave the room and see what is going on with Joshua, while Eduarda hugs Lila and tries to calm down and find out what is causing the noise. The wolves in the forest begin to howl in unison, as if trying to communicate.

Suddenly, a huge flash lights up the night sky, causing everyone in the royal academy and in the forest to be stunned. The flash comes from somewhere in the distance, but it's so strong it looks like it's very close.

Erick, and the other Wolves knew what it was about, as they had already seen or studied about it.

In the sky, the mark of Hercules shone, and looking at that, Erick lets out a roar that makes everyone around him tremble.