

The Return of the Last Dragon Chapter 4 - A strange woman

Chapter 4: A strange woman

Falkor was currently walking around with his human body in this dark forest.

He was new to this body, but the way he walked around confidently makes it seem like he owned this body for a long time.

That was just how good Falkor was in controlling his human body now.

Of course, there were many things that Falkor didn't know about the human body, and he could just do the things that were simple enough.

And after walking around for a few minutes, Falkor's patience reached its limits.

"Human legs are so small! What the hell is with this walking pace!"

As a dragon, Falkor was able to travel a great distance with just one or two footsteps.

Of course, when he was flying, he would have traveled a greater distance than before.

And right now, Falkor was just like traveling like a slow snail on the ground that was trying to squirm its way.

Of course, he wasn't that slow. In fact, if a human were here, they would be able to tell that Falkor was a fast walker.

Falkor just couldn't accept this speed as this was slow for him.

"Oh man, I miss my wings already..." Falkor said as he imagined the days where he was flying in the skies of Terrarosa.

No matter how much Falkor thought about it, being a human was just terrible.

"Wait, what's that?" Falkor said as he whipped his head towards a certain direction.

Falkor was currently looking at something that was lighting this dark night.

The distance was...well, far enough for Falkor to just barely see.

The light source wasn't that strong, but Falkor could still see it from all the way here.

"Hmm. Interesting." Falkor said as he squinted his eyes.

Falkor wanted to see what that light was about, so he decided to walk towards that place.

After all, he wouldn't be able to do anything at all if he doesn't have any information.

Falkor thought that there might be someone there.

"Wait. How do I act if it's a human? I can't kill someone without my powers."

Falkor was sure that he didn't have his powers from before he was a dragon.

He was sure that he was weaker, but at least as weak as a human.

That was why Falkor wasn't sure about how he will go through this.

After all, ever since Falkor was born, he was strong. He didn't have any weaknesses.

"Whatever. I'm sure I'm stronger than any other human." Falkor said as he started walking towards the light.

His steps were big, and his demeanor was showing his confidence in being able to take anything on.

After all, even if Falkor was a human now, it's not like those natural born humans would be stronger than him.

He was a dragon! It would be absurd for Falkor if there were someone who could be stronger than him as a human.

And that was why Falkor was able to reach the light much sooner than usual.

And when he did saw the source of the light, his eyes widened a little bit.

Why? It was because it was indeed another human.

The human was...naked. He didn't have any clothes on, but that was also the same case for Falkor.

Well, Falkor wouldn't mind something like being naked as he was naked all the time when he was a dragon.

However, what was different to this human was that his body was different compared to Falkor's.

And that's what caught Falkor's attention.

'His chest is big, and there's something like a little sword on top of it.'

That's what Falkor thought as he observed this human.

Falkor could also see that the hair of this human was red. That point was interesting for Falkor as he didn't have hair before in his dragon body.

And because he was so interested in that, his foot slipped up!

Swosh!

The sound of the grasses being disturbed could be heard as Falkor balanced himself.

Of course, Falkor didn't panic about something like that. Why should he?

However, when he looked up again, the human that Falkor was observing was looking at him straight in the eyes!

"Who are you?" The human said with quite a high tone.

And the man...no, the woman's arms were shining in light as she pointed her arms towards Falkor.

It seems that this woman was the source of the light.

"I'm Falkor Lors Asundra! What are you doing here? Did you not know this is my house?!"

Falkor shouted as he started walking towards the woman. Of course, Falkor didn't know that.

Falkor was a dragon, and he could only know that there was a female dragon.

However, he wouldn't know if there were a female human. After all, they all looked the same when Falkor killed them.

That was why his thing was dangling right in front of the woman without any shame.

And the woman could see that as she widened her eyes.

After all, she didn't cover up her parts because she was getting ready to kill Falkor.

However, to think that Falkor would just barge in with his thing right in front!

It was something unthinkable, and it threw the woman off guard.

'N-no...stay calm. He might be an enemy.' The woman thought as she calmed herself.

She was able to do that as she thought what Falkor just said.

"What do you mean this is your house? Don't you know this forest is the private property of the Lors Kingdom?"

"And how dare you use the Lors as your name! That's treason to the royalty!"

"Prepare to die!"

The woman said as the light in her arms brightened up some more!

And because of that, Falkor couldn't see anything as his eyes were blinded by the light.

However, Falkor was still calm. After all, what could possibly a human do something to him?

Even if he has a human body now, Falkor was sure that he was stronger than this human.

And that was why he couldn't dodge it.

He couldn't dodge the sword that pierced his stomach and exited out of his back.

"Kuhk!" Falkor coughed up blood as he widened his eyes.