

Life at the Top Chapter 1839

In every window was a man or woman, from young to old.

It also included the bosses of the top ten venture capital companies, the five major domestic securities companies, the founders of private equity firms, and the founders of large chambers of commerce and large conglomerates. These people could be regarded as the top elites in Somerland's economic and financial circles today.

Everyone's expressions were very heavy after Jasper briefly told them what had happened.

No fools could participate in this conference. Everyone understood that when the nest was overturned, with no egg left intact. No matter what industry they were in and how good the relationship between them was, no one could stay away from the tumultuous attack of the Wall Street capitalists right now.

"Mr. Laine, everyone understands what you said, but the question now is, what does Swallow Capital think?"

The boss of Vast Mountain Capital asked.

"Right now, the heads of Swallow Capital should be in the same meeting as us to discuss countermeasures. After that, they will definitely communicate their plans with us accordingly. So, before that, you have the right to know what is happening now. Please make preparations immediately after the meeting is over so that you will be prepared for the upcoming stock market crash."

Jasper's words made the faces of the people present more serious.

"Mr. Laine, has it really gotten to this stage?"

The boss of the country's largest daily necessities group asked this question. He was an industrial man and did not know much about finance, so Jasper could understand when he asked such a layman's question.

"Mr. Charles, I'll put it like this. If we lose this fight, your industry will become abandoned factories tomorrow."

Mr. Charles' face changed when Jasper said that.

He could not understand why his well run industry would suddenly devolve into abandoned factories, but he understood the truth. There were professionals that handle professional matters. If one did not understand it, one should not question the opinions of professionals.

Besides, he did not dare to question what Jasper said.

"Once the stock market crashes, all listed companies in all walks of life will be the first to suffer. Stock prices will plunge to the bottom and the company's market value will shrink, resulting in companies not being able to obtain cash flow for production and operation. If a foreign company in the same industry comes into the market and uses a lower price to dominate the market, what capital and confidence do you have that can beat those foreign companies?"

"This is a big social and environmental issue. This is why they say the country is our home, and without it, we'll be homeless. If the country's economy is destroyed, we'll become fools that others can take advantage of. We won't have any room for resistance-none at all."

After Jasper provided some further explanation, he got the third question.

This question was from a rich man in Waterhoof City, Quarterman.

"Mr. Laine, has JW Foundation ever considered divesting from the United States market and coming back to the domestic market?"

Upon hearing the question, Jasper looked at Quarterman.

Quarterman was very low-key, but Jasper knew that his son was not. Right now, Quarterman Jr. was in his teens, and in the future, he would be called the top second generation of Waterhoof.

However, right now, his old man still needed to politely address Jasper as Mr.

Laine.

"No,"

Jasper's calm answer caused huge stormst o form in everyone's hearts
