The corner of her mouth twitched in embarrassment. "Ummm, yes."

Daniel waved his hand as the waiter served the lunch, "Two romantic meals, please enjoy your meal."

Arya slowly put down her bag. She never thought that Daniel would do something like this for her, probably because he was afraid that she would speak carelessly so he did this to win her over.

Was she that easy to win over? Daniel really treated her as a fool.

"Arya, try it..."

up and saw that it was a waiter.

"For me?"

She opened the tickets to two classical concerts. They were her favorite orchestra! A note was attached with strong, bold writing.

"I was one who sent the side dishes. I wish us a happy wedding. I'll see you at the concert."

Other than Allen, no one else would do such a thing.

Arya smiled in her heart as she felt Allen's care and protection. This man was like her guardian angel.

Arya carefully placed the envelop in her bag. It was seem to be his second gift to her.

"It's all ready. We can go over now." Daniel walked in with his cellphone. When he saw Arya's expression, he frowned, "What's the matter? You're that happy?"

Arya raised her eyes and looked at him with a smile, "of course I'm happy that you have taken the time to accompany me."

However, her smile didn't touch her beautiful eyes.

"This way... Let's go, everyone from the Public Relation Department is waiting for us."

"I know."

So it was all for Caroline. Otherwise he wouldn't have eaten this meal with her and wouldn't have taken the trouble for deceive her.

Arya's face remained expressionless. All that happened today was just a trick of Daniel to win her over. Daniel's good intensions were venomous to her.

That afternoon, when Arya followed Daniel into the conference room, she noticed that the investors together with the directing team were all present, along with few reporters who were invited by Daniel.

Arya sat beside Daniel quietly, smiling elegantly.

The reporters checked the time and didn't delay any further. They immediately sat up their cameras and directed it at Arya.
