

Chapter 111 A vision or dream

111

AMALTHEA'S POV

"Are you not going to talk to me?" Augustus asked me for the tenth time, and I looked at him before rolling my eyes.

"Miss Amalthea, please talk to our sir. If you won't talk to him and leave like that, he is going to make our life difficult. Last time also, when you left and didn't reply to his messages or calls, he made us train five times harder. We didn't have a good night's sleep during those three days. You have no idea how much your actions affect his moods and how much those moods affect our daily lives," Jake said.

"I don't remember the time I asked you to speak between us," Augustus said, and Jake pouted his lips through the rearview mirror, making me sigh.

"Stop it. Can you really blame them after what you made them through?" I asked, and Augustus looked at me before sighing.

"I am sure now you are happy that I got scolded by her," Augustus said like a wronged kid, and I looked at Jake, who looked at me with a grin, making me chuckle.

Closing my eyes to relax a bit and enjoy the wind caressing my face, I sighed as I made myself comfortable in the seat, smiling when I fell asleep as darkness took over me.

~~~~~

'What are you talking about? Did you meet her? And then? You let her go just like that? Damn it! We have been trying to get a hold of her for the past month, and you let her go even after meeting her. Couldn't you do it properly?' A female voice rang in the air, and I walked further into the woods to hear what it was.

What were they talking about? What girl? Who was it? Is this one of my dreams? Or is it a vision? I thought as I walked further inside before hiding behind a tree.

'Don't you dare talk to me like this! I have been planning for this for three months. You people who haven't even gained a minuscule second of trust from her have no right to speak to me like this. And don't forget who I am. I am not phoenix or Jacob. You can't talk to me however you want,' I heard the familiar angry voice before I saw a man holding a woman's neck as he lifted her in the air.

'I -I am sorry, sir. Please accept my apologies. It was wrong of me to raise my voice at you. Please pardon my insolence,' I heard the woman's voice, and that man immediately loosened his hold, making her fall to the ground as she coughed loudly before scooting closer to the tree and away from the man, making me grit my teeth as I wanted to reach this man a lesson who was hurting this woman.

'Should we go and abduct her? That's the only solution I can think about. We cannot let her go around freely like this. We had tried to decrease her powers last time too, but her wolf was too powerful. Her wolf immediately blocked our voices from her head as soon as she started coughing blood, and before we could react more, the Lucan King came looking for her,' The woman said, and I raised my brows when I realized the person they were talking about was none other than me.

'No! That's the biggest mistake you made. It's because of that, she doesn't trust us Sirens. No wonder she had such an extreme reaction when she came to know that the leader she was colluding with was a Siren too. I was racking my brains thinking about what went so wrong for her to react like this, but it looks like you useless fellows used some underhanded tricks that backfired on us,' The man said. Judging from his words, it was clear he was none other than Antonio.

'We are sorry for our mistake, sir. What are your next orders? We will do as you say,' the woman said, and I looked at Antonio, who sighed before looking away.

'We will have to find a way to get her here at any cost. The more she stays out in the woods without the proper knowledge of her powers, the more harmful it will become for her and everyone. Sirens and witches are in the world to maintain order in the world. We have to look for a way to teach her to control these powers,' Antonio said, and I couldn't help but sigh.

Did I really misunderstand him last time? Was he taking me with him to help me with the mysteries of Siren powers? Should I have gone with him? I thought before looking at the woman.

'Azura, why do you think the Siren head is behind Amalthea Jade? They have appointed me as the Siren head even when I am not qualified to be one and are practicing their powers in solace to become even stronger while I handle all the matters. Why do you think they asked us to go for this girl Amalthea Jade and bring her here when it was my superior who gave her powers to Amalthea Jade herself?' Antonio asked before pausing.

'Do you never find it strange? Everyone knows that my superior was one of the strongest Sirens in the world, yet when she was dying, she didn't give her powers to a Siren but chose to offer her powers to this little girl called Amalthea Jade, who was only five years old?' He paused before turning to the four women whose faces were blurred to me.

Is it because I haven't seen these women?

'Don't you think something fishy is going on here that we all should know about? They are your superiors, not mine. Shouldn't you be curious about them? Well, I will leave these questions with you for you to find the answers. Let me know when you find something suitable. Till then, I will really have the head of the person who would go to her without my permission,' Antonio said before directly looking at the tree I was hiding behind.

Why is he looking here? Can he really see me? But isn't this a dream? Or a vision? How can he see me in my visions? I thought as he smiled.

'Let's not have a meeting until everyone has something valid to let me know. I have a lot of work. Something tells me Amalthea Jade is going to find me soon, and this time I am going to make sure I convince her to get a few lessons from me,' Antonio said.

'Amalthea, hey. Do you want something to eat,' I heard Augustus's voice beside me, and I opened my eyes before smiling at him when I saw he was protecting my eyes from harsh light.

'How far are we from there?' I asked, and he looked at Jake.

'It might take us 3-4 hours, Miss Amalthea,' Jake said, and I sighed before nodding.

'Well, let's eat something then,' I thought before squinting my brows when I saw Alven not far from us.

Author's Note- please comments your views and support your dear author.