Chapter 146

If it was up to him, Kellan would have died. Hunter would surely kill him in the worst way possible without even consulting this with anyone, once they had managed to squeeze all the information out of his mouth. All he needed to do was to issue an order and everything would be done without him even raised his finger.

However, this matter was different now because it involved Lilac. He was still her father. Her real father that she didn't remember she had.

It tickled his conscience if he had to kill Kellan without letting Lilac knew the truth first. Kellan was a traitor and the punishment suit his crime, but it didn't sit well with him when Lilac was still in the dark about this fact. He didn't want to see her sad in the future because she lost her chance to know her father.

More so, it would put their relationship in an awkward situation if she learned later on that he was the one, who killed her father.

Hunter simply didn't want Lilac to feel deceived, because that was not his intention at all.

Therefore, he needed to talk about this before the execution happened.

Her feeling about this matter was truly important for him, therefore... if only, by any chance, she wanted them to be pardoned, Hunter would seriously consider that. He could understand.

Because in the end of the day, not everyone could be crazy enough like him, who was willing to kill his own father. He how that felt. Even though he did it for a good intention, but he had to live with that fact for the rest of his life and he didn't Lilac to endure the same feeling.

Hunter could only sigh deeply that this woman would be the death of him... but even so, he was willing to give it up, since she was the reason why he was alive right now and in the future, she would be the reason why he was thriving.

“How are you feeling about this?” Hunter repeated his question, as he watched the look on Lilac’s face. He caressed her back in attempt to lift a little bit of pressure and make her felt slightly comfortable. “If the execution happened, it will be me, who killed your father. Are you fine with that?”

Lilac was frowning so hard, Hunter leaned over to kiss the crease between her brows. He didn’t like to see her in trouble like this.

Let alone when she was facing a dilemma like this.

However, he didn’t urge her to make a quick decision. He chose to wait until she was ready to talk and during that time, he simply caressed her back, as if telling her that it would be alright for her to take all the time she needed.

Finally, after a long silence, Lilac voiced out her opinion. “Can I see him? Did he know about me?”

“Yes and no. You can see him, but I don’t think he knew you are his missing daughter.”

“I don’t think I am missing at all.” Lilac was being abandoned, she was not missing. Hunter was only being very generous with his choice of word. “I was being abandoned.”

Hunter hugged her, because he couldn’t deny that. There was some truth in there and Lilac would think he saw her as a fool if he refuted that.

In the end, the alpha simply held her close to his chest and kiss her forehead. “When do you want to see him?” Their body fit with each other, as if they were made for one another. If the lycan had a mate bond, then Hunter mate would be this woman in his arms.

“I want to see him now, is it possible?” Lilac asked casually, she didn’t think she could hold it back any longer and wanted this matter to end immediately.

“Okay. Let’s see him.”

After saying that, the two of them didn’t immediately get up and get dressed, but they simply stayed like that for another two hours, until Lilac had gathered the courage she needed to face the person, who had thrown her away.

Hunter helped her to get dressed because a woman dress could be complicated, but the main reason was because he wanted to have an excuse to touch her freely.

Lilac laughed at his attempt and this made their mood lightened a little bit.

After that, Hunter took her to the dungeon, where they held Kellan, Grace and Tania. They would wait for the execution, but the date had not been settled yet.

The smelly scent of blood and foul smell of the dungeon hit their nose when they walked past the first security post.

“There is no need to follow us.” Hunter stopped the guard, who would come with them inside because whatever conversation Lilac would have with her father, it would be a private matter.

The alpha also sent all the guard along the aisle away, to clear this place from any disturbance.

“Are you sure, you are okay?” Hunter kept checking on her and tried to find any sign that she couldn’t face this.

However, Lilac handle this like a champion, despite some discomfort, she looked like she was ready to face the reality. Hunter couldn’t be more proud than this to have her as his woman, the luna of his pack.

“I am fine. It’s not like he can throw me away again, right?” Lilac tried to make a joke, but even for herself that joke sounded very bitter. “I should stop making a joke. I have a bad sense of humor.”

Hunter chuckled at that. “You are funny even when you are only breathing.”

“Are you trying to mock me?”

“No. You can take that as a compliment.”

“How it supposed to sound like a compliment?”

Lilac frowned, but then there was this smile on the corner of her lips.

“I like your beautiful smile better.”

“You always make me want to smile.”

“Are you sure you are going alone?” Hunter wanted to make sure that she would be fine. Lilac thought about it for a while. “Can you stay here?” If she needed him, he would be only a call away and that was what she needed right now.

Lilac tiptoed and kissed his cheek. “I will go now.”

With that, Lilac pushed the door open. This steel door felt so heavy, or maybe it was only in her mind, because in actuality, it was her heart that carried so much weight. She didn't know what to expect from this reunion and whether it would make things different.
