

Chapter 180 Provoking Brea's Fans

After Wayne finished a cigarette, the smoke dissipated on his fingertips. But Tyson's words lingered in his mind.

Suddenly, he found himself seeming a little envious of Tyson.

They used to be the same, not having any expectations for love. But after Tyson married Celia, everything changed. Every time Tyson mentioned her, a bright light shone in his eyes. This was something Wayne had never seen before.

So Wayne was very happy for Tyson.

He had known Tyson for many years, and it was only now that he felt that Tyson was not as aloof as before.

But no matter how envious he was of Tyson, he couldn't take a step to pursue love.

He also had dated when he was young. But those relationships were short-lived like fireworks. Those young women might have approached him only because of his appearance and family background. None of them had ever treated him sincerely.

Several of his cousins were not as good-looking as him, but their girlfriends were all beautiful. They were among the beauty queens and popular award-winning actresses.

At that time, he always told himself to find a woman more beautiful than them to marry in the future. He wanted to hear everyone sigh, "What a perfect match!"

The age of ignorance and dreams had passed quickly. Wayne could still make countless beautiful women admire him with just one look and smile. But he had already lost the expectation of love in his heart.

If it weren't for Tyson, probably he wouldn't even have a friend.

After all, he had witnessed how evil the world was and how hideous people's hearts were at his young age. If he still yearned for the illusory love, then he was too naive.

But of course, he still sincerely wished Tyson and Celia to be happy together.

As for him, he would just live in such a situation for the time being.

His father always urged him to find someone to marry. But where could he find his Miss Right among so many people in the vast world?

Wayne sighed, threw the cigarette butt away, and ordered Dilan Norris to drive to the hotel.

Dilan was his assistant and driver at the same time. And now, Dilan would accompany him to the hotel to meet a client.

When they soon arrived at the hotel, Wayne found that there were many bodyguards outside. There were also a few fanatic fans with lighted signboards around the hotel, shouting in unison, "I love you, Brea!"

He frowned and asked Dilan in confusion, "What is going on here?"

Dilan looked out of the window and shook his head. "I don't know either."

Wayne got out of the car and stared at the group of enthusiastic fans. Then he turned to Dilan and said, "Go and ask."

Dilan didn't dare to refuse. He trotted over to ask and soon came back to report.

"Brea is shooting a jewelry advertisement in the hotel today. It is said that she will stay here tonight. These fans got the news and came to see her, especially to cheer for her."

The scene where Brea made trouble in Evans Group last time immediately flashed through Wayne's mind. And he shivered, not knowing why.

"How could a fierce woman like Brea have these fans?"

His voice was not loud, but one fanatic fan happened to pass by.

When this fan heard his words, the fan immediately asked angrily, "What do you mean by saying that? Brea is my idol because she is so gentle and beautiful. How dare you say she is fierce! With your handsome face, I didn't expect you to say such harsh words. Be careful in speaking. I will sue you."

At this time, Wayne didn't realize the seriousness of the matter yet, so he didn't take the fan seriously. He just said casually, "You don't know Brea personally. How can you say she is gentle?"

The fan was still young, and her words were unreasonable. "Brea is gentle, beautiful, and good at acting. I have been following her for many years. How can I not know who she is?"

"I'm telling you, I won't allow anyone to slander her. Apologize now!"

Wayne shrugged. "Apologize? Why should I? Is it wrong to be honest nowadays?"

But his attitude infuriated the fan even more. She grabbed his clothes and shouted at the fans around her, "Girls, this man is insulting Brea and spreading rumors about her. He said that she has a bad temper. I asked him to apologize, but he refused."
