

Chapter 69 Turmoil On Her First Day At Work

There was a commotion in the crowd. Brea gently pushed Celia and motioned for her to say something. "Cece, say a few words to everyone to get familiar with them."

Celia had to bite the bullet. She started by introducing herself, "Hello, everyone. My name is Ce..."

But she abruptly stopped.

After struggling for a while, she finally decided to introduce herself with her real name. After all, she was only Cerissa when she got married. Her real name was still Celia, so she could only use her own name to go through the hiring procedure.

"My name is Celia Kane. It's a pleasure meeting all of you."

Almost everyone was friendly to her. They even chatted with her for a while. But a few unhappy ones were whispering to each other. "She also pulled some strings to join the group, just like Brea."

The person's voice was not loud. But it so happened that it was quiet when she said this, so her voice was heard by all.

Celia was a little embarrassed, while Brea went berserk on the spot. She walked through the crowd, approached the woman, and said condescendingly, "Say it again."

The woman immediately became a coward. She nodded and bowed, looking like a lackey. "I'm sorry, Miss Duffy. I just said it casually. I didn't mean to insult you."

Brea snorted coldly and looked at the woman up and down. "My family is rich, and I have a good relationship with Mr. Reyes. But after I became Semsy Group's artist, I won the opportunities to attend all shooting works and other activities through my own efforts. Do you know why I continuously hone my acting skills all these years? Because what I hate the most is when others say I am pulling strings to get all these opportunities," she said angrily.

Then she suddenly stretched out her hand and pulled Celia to the front of that woman. "And even if I really pulled some strings to be an artist of Semsy Group, Celia is different. She entered this company with her own ability. The truth is, her talent in design is more excellent than your eloquence."

"I..."

The woman wanted to explain, but Brea interrupted, "All of you, listen up! Don't gossip behind my back. If I hear something again, I will make you suffer."

She then looked at the woman coldly and said, "Apologize to Celia."

The woman immediately smiled and apologized as if she wanted to kowtow to Celia.

Celia smiled and said, "We are colleagues here. Don't take it so seriously. All I want is to work hard and have a harmonious relationship with you all."

After the turmoil, Brea went upstairs with Celia to go through Celia's hiring formalities.

As soon as the two of them left, several colleagues gathered around and complained to each other.

"It's very obvious that they both pulled strings. Why are they so arrogant? What's so great about relying on connections?"

"Even if she hires one hundred designers to serve her, an eye candy like Brea still can't be popular."

On the other hand, as soon as Celia finished filling out the personal data sheet, Brea sat on the sofa and introduced the main departments of the company to her.

"I'm in the performing arts department, and you're in the design department. These two departments are very close. So if you need anything, come to me at any time. If I'm not available, you can contact Foley, and he will help you deal with anything. Although he looks like a lackey, he is good at his job. He also has a say here in the company."

Celia nodded, indicating that she understood. Then she followed Brea to the human resources department to have her information recorded.

"The human resources department will take care of the rest. I will give you a tour of the performing arts department, so you will get familiar with the costume room and the dressing room. You will often stay in these two places in the future."

Celia nodded and followed Brea. When they were chatting happily, Kelley Cruz, Brea's assistant, suddenly ran over and said, "Miss Duffy, Mr. Reyes wants to see you in his office. He has something to talk with you."

