Aubrey's expression shifted, but she immediately composed herself. She cast a few more puzzled glances toward Celia.

Celia thought that Aubrey would say something, but Aubrey just left with Alicia without saying anything.

As soon as Aubrey and Alicia left, Nora cried out in pain, "Ouch, it hurts!"

Her waist had been injured earlier because of the collision. She endured it just to hide her weakness. She couldn't hold on much longer now that those troublemakers were gone.

Celia was concerned about Nora. She walked over to her and said, "I'll take you to the hospital."

Nora snorted and looked away as she remembered how Celia lied to her. "Humph! We are no longer friends. You don't have to be concerned about me or take me to the hospital. I have hands and feet. I can go on my own!"

Celia was disappointed at first. But because Nora had defended her, she assumed Nora still considered her a friend. Nora was indifferent to her solely because she had lied to her.

"Nora, you are one of my best friends. I don't want to lose you because of this misunderstanding. I didn't mean to lie to you or make a fool out of you. I just didn't want you to get hurt, so I didn't tell you the truth. You will always be my friend," Celia held Nora's shoulder and stated truthfully and Nora's heart softened a little.

She couldn't help but think about how Celia had defended her a moment ago.

She did that by offending Aubrey, who came from a wealthy and influential family.

Yet Celia was not frightened at all. She just wanted to protect her friend.

Nora didn't have a stone heart. She adored Celia very much. She was angry and ended her friendship with Celia, not because Celia married the man she liked, but because Celia chose to keep the truth from her.

But on second thought, if she had been in the same situation, she would most likely choose to lie to her friend as well.

She would rather her friend misunderstood her than her friend got hurt.

Nora figured everything out, but she was still angry. So, she told Celia, "Leave me alone for a bit. I'll think about your kindness to me again. I'll come to you after I have made a decision."

Celia was relieved to hear her soft voice, but she was concerned about her injury. "Can you let me take you to the hospital, Nora, even if you don't forgive me? You can treat me like a stranger. If you were hurt on the street, you wouldn't refuse a stranger to take you to the hospital, would you?"

Nora, on the other hand, still refused Celia's offer. "I don't normally accept help from strangers. Don't forget that I'm a celebrity."

Celia felt helpless after hearing Nora's response and left.

The door to the lounge was reopened not long after she left.

Brea came in, holding some ointment.

Nora, taken aback by her arrival, inquired, "What brings you here? There are a lot of big shots today. Don't you want to accompany them?"

Brea sighed. "Cece is concerned about you. She is worried because you refused to go to the hospital. So she asked me to take care of you."

Nora was shocked and confused at the same time.

Brea tried to speak for Celia while attending to Nora's wound. She wanted the two of them to be friends again. "You should be happy. You have a wonderful friend. Don't be overly critical."

Nora was hesitant when she heard this.

Alicia assumed Aubrey was upset and continued to speak negatively about Nora once they left.

"Nora is so ungrateful! We traveled a long distance to inform her that her father is ill, but she threatened us with a woman who appeared out of nowhere. Aubrey, you are tolerant. If it were someone else, Nora wouldn't have been spared..."

Aubrey had enough of Alicia's rants and interrupted her. "Stop talking about it. I'm tired of listening to your nonsense. Do you know the woman who was with Nora?"

Alicia was surprised for a moment. She didn't expect Aubrey to be so interested in Celia. She replied, "I don't know her, but my uncle is from Hosworth. I can ask him. Why do you want to look into her? She's nothing special, just pretty."

Aubrey answered, "You just need to look into her. You don't need to know anything else."

Alicia was a servant in front of Aubrey. She nodded and replied, "Got it."

Aubrey seemed calm, but she felt an unsettling feeling deep in her heart.

Her happy times, she thought, would be numbered thanks to Celia.

Hence, she needed to act first and not let Celia ruin her life.

Celia got a call from Tyson as she was leaving the venue.

Tyson asked, concerned, "Is it over? I'll come get you."

Celia replied, "No. Today is your day off. Just stay at home. I'll return on my own."

"Be careful on the way," Tyson cautioned.

Celia ended the call and rushed home. She saw Tyson come out of the kitchen with dishes in his hands as soon as she stepped inside. He grinned at her and said, "You've arrived. Wash your hands and come have dinner."

"Why have you cooked instead of having a good rest?" Celia asked.

Tyson set the dishes down and approached her. He kissed her on the cheek and told her, "Since you were exhausted last night, I wanted to prepare something delicious for you."

Celia understood what he was saying. She blushed and pounded him on the chest, pouting. "You're annoying!"

She feigned to be upset, but Tyson took the bait and coaxed her. "Honey, don't get angry. Come and try my food. Today I learned a few new recipes. Of course, I didn't leave out your favorite seafood."

He took Celia to wash her hands before sitting her down, serving food, and peeling shrimps for her.

Celia's anger subsided when she saw how sweet he was to her.

They finished their meal happily.

After dinner, Celia was full and complimented, "Tyson, you're a much better cook now than you were before. You can now open a restaurant."

Tyson cradled her in his arms, nestled on the sofa, and caressed her stuffed belly.

At this point, Tyson's phone rang. He picked it up, and Briar's voice could be heard on the other end of the line. "Sir, there is a clue about the metal button you requested me to look into. The Carter family and the Peterson family in Captern both own metal buttons with this unique pattern."

Tyson frowned and informed Celia of the news.

Celia was taken aback when she heard Tyson mention the Carter family.

Such a coincidence! It was the Carter family!
