

Chapter 765 Father and Son Having A Meeting

Celia didn't take more than a day off before going to work at Semshy Group, alongside Tyson.

Tyson intended for her to rest at home for longer, but Celia insisted on returning to work.

Despite not being able to contribute much to the company, Celia insisted on accompanying Tyson at work. As a couple, they needed to support each other during difficult times and be there for each other.

Celia retained her job title, but now had her own private office. About half of the employees here were transferred from Semshy Group's Hosworth office. Etta willingly followed Celia to her new workplace.

Celia was delighted to see Etta on the team. She knew her capabilities and believed she could be a great help to her.

But she was surprised that Etta would come to Captern. Celia asked her about the move after the morning meeting. "Isn't your home in Hosworth? Why did you agree to move to Captern? Are your parents okay with you so far away?"

Etta was a little bashful. "I aspire to be an outstanding designer, and you have always been my role model, Cece. I wish to learn from you and gain more experience. Moreover, there are many more chances available here as compared to Hosworth. If I live here, I will have more prospects. I have discussed this with my family, and they all back me up."

Celia expressed her admiration for Etta's dedication and felt envious of the understanding and support she received from her family. She gave Etta a pat on the shoulder and smiled. "Since you've made up your mind to pursue your dream, you should work harder. You are intelligent, and I believe you will become an excellent designer in the future."

In a hushed tone, Etta said, "Cece, I'm amazed at Mr. Shaw's capabilities. He resolved the company's crisis so quickly, and I'm not sure how he did it. The Shaw Group even lifted the boycott on Semshy Group, and Hendrix Shaw, the former CEO of the Shaw Group, personally came to visit him!"

Celia was taken aback. "Are you absolutely certain?"

Etta nodded. "Yes, I'm sure. Hendrix is currently in the CEO's office, and he's been there for a while."

Celia was lost in thought. She knew that Hendrix of the Shaw Group was Tyson's biological father.

It was probable that the Shaw Group investigated Tyson and Celia. If that was the case, it was likely Hendrix knew that Tyson was his son.

Celia was filled with anticipation and worry as she wondered how the meeting between Tyson and Hendrix would turn out.

Celia was even more thrilled for Tyson than he was himself. It was exciting he was able to have his first meeting with his biological father.

Meanwhile, in the CEO's office.

Tyson and Hendrix sat facing each other, with only a marble desk dividing them.

The two men stared at each other for an extended period of time, neither one breaking the silence first.

Hendrix appeared outwardly composed, but inside his heart was pounding.

Although he'd never seen his son before, Hendrix was now sure Tyson was his own flesh and blood.

Tyson felt a deep sense of connection with Hendrix, despite the fact that they were strangers just moments ago. The realization that they shared the same blood had a powerful impact on him, and he couldn't help but feel a sense of excitement and anticipation about the future.

There was a long period of silence between the two. Tyson finally broke it by addressing Hendrix in a cold tone. "Sir, what is the reason for your presence here?"

"I'm here to apologize for what the Shaw Group did to the Semshy Group. This kind of unfair competition won't happen again. I swear."

Chapter 766 Tyson's Rejection

At that moment, Tyson's emotions were difficult to articulate, but it could be said that he felt disappointed.

Tyson anticipated Hendrix's visit would include an explanation for the past. He was taken aback to realize the meeting was for business matters.

Despite not having any emotional attachment to his father, Tyson couldn't help feeling an overwhelming sense of disappointment upon seeing his birth father's cold and detached demeanor.

With a chilly tone, Tyson addressed Hendrix. "Mr. Shaw, thank you for your promise. However, now that I am in Captern, I am not intimidated by the Shaw family. Even if you don't stop going against my company, I will find a way to resolve the issue on my own."

As Hendrix observed Tyson's commanding presence, he couldn't help but see a reflection of his younger self in his son. Despite this appreciation, he felt an even deeper sense of remorse.

Uncertain about Tyson's perception of him, Hendrix only intended to meet his long-lost son without any expectations of reconciliation. However, in that moment, he couldn't contain his emotions. "I am your father. I cannot stand to see you being bullied."

As soon as Hendrix finished his sentence, Tyson responded with a sneer. "What are you trying to imply? You're my father, so what? Claiming to be a father means nothing when you've never acted like one." His tone was sharp with disbelief. "So why bother showing up now? I won't recognize you as my father."

In what way could Tyson readily accept him as his father?

Hendrix caused Tyson and his mother to endure a wretched life. It was ultimately his actions that led to his mother's tragic death.

She was a truly virtuous person who deserved a better life. It was unfortunate she departed from this world prematurely.

Tyson's unexpected statement left Hendrix heartbroken. He was overwhelmed with feelings of guilt and regret, prompting him to accept the accusation.

"I apologize for the pain and suffering I caused you and your mother. If only I'd trusted her, we wouldn't have been forced apart for all those years. Alas, I didn't even get a chance to see her before she passed. I can feel your hatred. It's completely understandable for you to harbor resentment towards me."

Upon hearing Hendrix's words, Tyson became even more agitated. "You have no right to bring up my mother."

The Shaw family was somehow involved in his mother's death. Even though Tyson had yet to discover the true culprit, he held a deep grudge against the entire Shaw family. He considered them his mother's killers and his enemies.

Overwhelmed with guilt, Hendrix couldn't help but recognize the significance of Tyson's loss. Clenching his fists, he tried to reassure Tyson. "I'm currently investigating the car accident from that year. I promise to uncover the truth for you and your mother."

Tyson was taken aback, as he assumed Hendrix no longer cared about the incident. He never expected Hendrix to be investigating the matter. This made him wonder if it meant Hendrix still had feelings for his mother.

Despite Hendrix's offer to help, Tyson declined. "It's not necessary. I'll avenge my mother on my own. If you have nothing else to say, you can leave now."

As he gazed at Tyson's frigid countenance, Hendrix felt disappointed. He tried once again to explain himself. "I had no idea that your mother was pregnant back then. If I had known, I would have never allowed what had happened to occur. I'm not here to ask for your forgiveness. I just want to do everything in my power to make amends for your mother, no matter how small it may be."

Despite being moved by Hendrix's words and sensing his sincerity, Tyson found it difficult to accept his apology. Every time he thought of the pain and agony his mother endured, he couldn't help but hold resentment towards Hendrix.

Tyson sneered. "Hendrix Shaw, stop making excuses. You have your own wife and son now. Go back and enjoy their love and companionship. My mother never needed your hypocritical concern, and you will never be able to make up for what you've done."
