Chapter 4108

“Or how about I ask your brother-in-law to livestream it for you?”

Serenity looked down at her rounded belly, ran her hand over it, and sighed. “Ever since this little one came along, I really can’t go anywhere. Fine, I’ll listen to you, sister. When the time comes, I’ll have Zachary go over and take a video for me.”

To avoid worrying her sister, Serenity gave in and stopped insisting on going in person to offer her blessings.

“Seren, go to bed now. Your brother-in-law is calling,” Liberty said. “Don’t bother replying to me. I’ll answer his call and keep battling this bed.”

Serenity responded with a simple “mm-hmm” before ending the conversation.

“It’s the middle of the night, and you’re still awake. Who were you chatting with?”

A gentle voice sounded behind her as Zachary approached, draping a coat over her shoulders.

“It’s still chilly in the early morning,” he said softly. “You didn’t wear a coat when you got up. What if you catch a cold?”

Serenity tugged at the coat and replied, “My pajamas are thick, and the room isn’t cold. My sister just moved into the Farrell family mansion. She said she’s having trouble sleeping, maybe because of the new environment or something else.”

She turned to look at him. “I got up to use the bathroom and grab some water. Then I saw her message, so I chatted with her for a bit. Did I wake you?”

Zachary guided her back to the bed and shook his head. “No, I’m used to it. When I reach over and don’t feel you there, I wake up.”

In truth, Serenity's growing belly kept him on edge. He was constantly worried she might go into labor unexpectedly, even though her due date hadn't arrived yet.

Zachary was a naturally light sleeper, and now even more so. If Serenity wasn't beside him, he'd wake up quickly.

Some nights, he'd quietly watch her belly rise and fall, gently placing his hand on it. He often wondered what their baby would look like.

Would the child resemble him? Or Serenity?

He hoped their baby would inherit the best of both of them.

"Maybe Liberty isn't used to the new environment yet," Serenity said thoughtfully. "Or maybe she's got a lot on her mind. She's under a lot of pressure right now. Even though the Farrell Group has declined, it's still a massive corporation.

"Sis has worked in big companies and has her own business, but running a conglomerate is a whole other challenge. Plus, she's just taken on the responsibility of leading a large family. She needs to show results and make a positive impact for everyone in the family. Only then can she truly earn their trust and establish herself.

"Honestly, if it were me, I'd feel the pressure too. But I believe in her. As the eldest daughter of the Farrell family, her natural leadership skills will emerge. She'll prove she's the right person for the job."

Zachary nodded. "You're right. Maybe send her a message with some encouraging words. Let her know she's not alone. And don't forget, your aunt will step in if needed. She won't let Liberty face this all by herself."

Serenity smiled. "You're right. Aunt Audrey is experienced, and Mr. Jimenez is there too. He'll guide her through the tricky parts, and Aunt will teach her what she needs to know. Liberty's got this."
