

Married At First Sight Chapter 4290

Chapter 4290

Even the patients and their families staying on Kathryn's hospital floor had grown tired of the spectacle. Most blamed Holden for his behavior. Only a handful tried to take the moral high ground, lecturing Kathryn as if they had any right.

She ignored them. Pedro handled those self-righteous busybodies for her.

Her only focus was recovering.

"Miss, should I get rid of him? He comes here every day, making the same scene, shouting the same nonsense. He's not tired of hearing himself, but I'm tired of listening to it," Pedro grumbled as he handed Kathryn a peeled apple.

Kathryn took a bite and said, "Let him scream. It helps him let off steam. If he bottles it up, it might ruin his health." She chewed thoughtfully. "I don't care what he says. Everyone has heard it all before. Let him talk—his words don't hurt me. But I want my father to live. I want him to live a long, long life—eighty, ninety, even a hundred years. And I want him to watch me live happily. Even if I never take over Farrell Group, I'll still have a successful life."

Kathryn had built her own career.

Pedro was more than capable.

Once Kathryn was fully healed and discharged, she planned to marry Pedro. In every way that mattered, they were already husband and wife. When Liberty officially took over the Farrell family business, Kathryn and Pedro would step away from that world and focus entirely on their own endeavors.

Without the weight of the Farrell legacy, life would be far more peaceful.

"For all his noise, my father is the only one making a fuss," Kathryn noted. "My three sisters-in-law have kept their distance. When he's not around, they visit with their children. They comfort me, encourage me to focus on my recovery, and even have their kids apologize on behalf of my brothers. They're much more reasonable than my father."

Of course, that wasn't surprising.

The brothers had treated their wives terribly. Now that they were in prison, their wives could finally breathe.

While they were free, those men kept mistresses, betraying their marriages without a second thought.

The two younger sisters-in-law had stayed in their marriages, swallowing their grievances for the sake of their children and their share of the inheritance.

The eldest sister-in-law, Erika, had divorced and was now trying to change her children's perception of Kathryn.

Surprisingly, Kathryn's nieces and nephews now treated her much better. After hearing their father and grandfather constantly badmouth her, they had started questioning things.

The older kids, who had learned a bit of law, understood that their fathers had committed serious crimes. They realized that their aunt had every right to refuse forgiveness.

After all, their fathers had planned the kidnapping with the intent to kill her.

There was no way she could have just let that go.

Pedro scowled. "I get so mad hearing him insult you like that."

Kathryn smiled. "Don't waste your anger on him. Look at me—I'm not bothered. I'm here, eating my apple, enjoying my day. He can shout all he wants. In a few minutes, the doctor will call security to drag him away. I don't care, but he's disturbing other patients. Let's see if their families will tolerate it."