

Married At First Sight Chapter 4306

Chapter 4306

Pedro loved Kathryn as if she were his very existence.

As they drove off, he switched on the heater. “It snowed in some areas today,” he mentioned.

“Not surprising,” Kathryn said. “Up north, it still mires snows well after the New Year.”

She turned her head, glancing at the back seat. No sign of anything unusual.

Was Pedro planning to propose?

But there were no flowers, no gift boxes—nothing that hinted at a proposal.

Then again, since they had just been discharged from the hospital and planned to get their marriage certificate the day after tomorrow, maybe he’d propose tomorrow instead.

In front of Liberty, Kathryn had already confirmed their plans to get married. A proposal wasn’t necessary.

Still... she hoped for one.

What others had, she wanted too.

Before long, they arrived at the Fortress Hotel.

Just as they were walking in, they ran into Hayden at the entrance.

Hayden, now officially the third young lady of the York family, still retained her CEO status at Queen Enterprise. She hadn’t switched to wearing women’s clothes—her short hair and black suit gave her the same confident, commanding presence as before.

If anything, she looked even more handsome than Kevin.

“Kathryn,” Hayden greeted first. “You’re out of the hospital?”

“Yes, I was discharged today. Miss Queen, are you back from your honeymoon?” Kathryn asked with a smile.

Seeing Kevin emerging from the hotel, she assumed he was chasing after his wife.

Hayden nodded. “I got back three days ago. Work’s been crazy, so I haven’t had time to visit. I planned to stop by in a couple of days once I cleared my backlog.”

“I appreciate it,” Kathryn said. “Mr. Queen and Auntie visited me several times while I was recovering. Thank you for your concern. Are you here for dinner? If you need a table, I can ask Kevin to arrange a private room for you.”

Hayden glanced at Pedro, then turned to Kevin as if considering it.

It was peak dining time, and the Fortress Hotel was packed.

Pedro quickly spoke up. “No need, Miss Queen. I booked a private room and ordered our meal in advance. No waiting required.”

Hayden didn’t push the issue. “Alright, you two go ahead and enjoy your dinner. I just wrapped up a client meeting and already ate. Let’s catch up another day.”

“Sounds good,” Kathryn agreed.

Hayden and Kevin left with their bodyguards.

Watching them go, Kathryn sighed. “Miss Queen is still as stunning as ever, even after marriage.”

Now that Jensburg knew the truth—that the Queen family’s eldest son was actually their eldest daughter—people still couldn’t help but marvel every time they saw Hayden.

She wasn’t just handsome. She was beautiful.

Only after Hayden’s car disappeared did Kathryn and Pedro head into the hotel.

Pedro always tailored their meals to Kathryn’s tastes. Tonight was no different—every dish on the table was one of her favorites.

But something felt off.

Pedro, who usually ate quickly, was taking his sweet time. Tonight, he was moving as slow as an old woman savoring her last meal.

Kathryn patiently waited for him to finish. She had set down her chopsticks half an hour earlier, but he was still at it.

Then, after receiving a message on his phone, Pedro finally placed his chopsticks down.

“Miss,” he said with a knowing smile. “I’m full.”

Kathryn narrowed her eyes. “Pedro, are you stalling for time? What surprise have you planned? I can’t wait any longer.”

Her curiosity was piqued.

Pedro simply grinned. “Be patient. The surprise will be revealed soon.”

Kathryn exhaled. “Alright, I’ll wait.”

Her anticipation only grew.