

Master Odell 1251

Chapter 1251 Odell came out with Flint and Liam, and he saw Sylvia looking at him helplessly. He stroked her head and then said to Sebastian, "Sebastian, go check on him."

Sebastian nodded and went over to John.

A few moments later, Sebastian said, "Master John doesn't seem to be in good shape. He's already unconscious."

"Bring him inside. And call Dr. Lambert to check on him."

"Yes, sir."

Odell then held Sylvia's hand and returned to the living room.

John was brought inside and placed on the bed by the living room.

Liam said, "They are eating outside, so they told me to come to check on you and ask if you want something to eat once you wake up." "I'm so sorry to trouble you guys." With a smile, John got out of bed and carried Flint out of the room.

Liam suspiciously stared at him as he followed him outside.

The three of them soon arrived in the living room.

Both Odell and Sylvia were sitting by the dining table.

"Master Carter, Mrs. Carter, you can just send anyone to wake me up instead of troubling the two little adorable boys," John said weakly as he carried Flint over to them.

Sylvia frowned.

Odell curled his lips. "I'm afraid no one else has the guts to wake you up."

John's expression froze

Some time later, John finally put his cutlery down after he cleaned the plate. He wiped his mouth elegantly with the serviette and smiled at the couple. "Thank you for your hospitality, Master Carter and Mrs. Carter."

"Then, can you please leave already?" Sylvia said.

John smiled. "I think my head is still spinning. I might have to bother you two for another night." Sylvia sulked. She had never seen someone who could conceal his lies with such elegance and nonchalance even though others knew that he was lying. No wonder Sherry always called him a bastard.

While she was thinking about another way to chase the man out of the house, Odell held her hand. He smiled at John and said, "Since you are feeling unwell, please stay for another night. I'll send someone to escort you back to Glenchester when you feel better tomorrow."

John maintained his elegant smile. "Thank you."

Odell then went upstairs with Sylvia whereas John went back to the guest room.

In the stillness of the night, John was unable to sleep. With the windows open, he leaned back on the bed and stared outside.

pinched her face and kissed her lips. He whispered, "You looked really cute when you tried to lecture John."

Sylvia was rendered speechless, but it put a smile on her face. She grunted and buried her face in his chest. "What if he insists on staying here tomorrow?"

Would they have to ask John to leave again?

Odell hugged her waist. "He will leave tomorrow."

Baffled, she asked, "Why are you so sure?"

"Because Sherry isn't here, and there's no point of him being here." "I guess you're right," Sylvia said. She shut her eyes and continued, "Let's get some sleep. I want to visit Sherry tomorrow."

"You can't go to Sherry tomorrow."

Sherry unconsciously tightened her lips. She had disappeared for more than 24 hours, and no one knew if she was alive or dead, yet her parents only cared about Shannon who had been arrested for contracted murder and even caused a scene in front of the station.

Sherry tapped the cross to close the picture. She then scrolled down for more comments.

“Based on their outfits, they don’t seem like any John and Jane Doe. They must be the parents of the arrested lady.”

“I pity them as parents. I wonder why the lady would want to kill someone instead of enjoying her life as the wife of the richest man. Could it be related to the husband himself?”

The particular comment attracted heat from other netizens, all wanting to defend John’s reputation and status. Most of them were local Glenchesterians, and some of them even listed John’s contributions to the city.

The original poster was forced to apologize for the comment.

In the end, someone came up with a conclusion. “If it really is related to the richest man in the city, he would have been caught as well. If the man uses his wealth and resources to keep things down, we wouldn’t be seeing this article either, so let’s just wait for the official statement from the police department.”

Chapter 1256 It was not an exaggeration to say that John was the one responsible for Shannon's arrest.

did not mention anything about him apologizing or lowering himself to meet her. The words screamed arrogance and egoism as he asked her to go back to him before he forgave her for what she had done.

Aside from the fact that what Sherry had done to John six years ago was against her will, even if she did it voluntarily, she had been imprisoned at the Stocktons' residence for two years and tortured sexually. The torment she had received was more than enough to make up for what she had done to him.

As Sherry's chest started to tighten, tears uncontrollably rolled down her eyes, and she started to choke on her emotions.

Just when she was about to break down in tears, a tiny pair of hands held her face.

"Aunt Sherry, why are you crying?" Isabel had somehow woken up without her realizing it and came up to her. The girl was looking at her crying face worriedly.

Sherry immediately wiped her tears away. "I—I'm fine. I just saw a touching video."

"Adults like to lie," Isabel said with pouty lips. "It must be that man making you sad again, am I right?"

Sherry forced a bitter smile on her face.

Odell curled his lips. "Sure."

Meanwhile, in the MPV that had just merged into the traffic, John leaned back in the rear seat and went on every available social media platform.

The messages he texted her last night were all left unread, and those that got through did not get a reply. It seemed like she had no access to social media.

Then, he checked his email. There were a number of new emails, mostly from his subordinates at the office, and agreements from his partners and clients. There was no personal mail, let alone a reply from that woman.

He wondered if she had access to her email or even noticed the email he sent her.

He started to worry about her condition. Had she gotten so weak that she could not even pick up her phone?

The flurry of thoughts furrowed his brows. He took his glasses off and rubbed his temples to ease the unnecessary thoughts.

A strong sense of disgust rushed into her head.

Before her escape, she would have scolded the bastard a hundred times over, but she had learned how to stomach her grievance. She knew he was trying to get her attention so that she would go back to him.

She grunted and tossed her phone aside.

Sylvia carried Flint in one hand and held Liam's hand with the other.

After they got out of the elevator and were about to leave the hospital, Sherry stopped. She released Isabel's hand, covered her mouth in a hurry, and ran to the trash can to throw up.

Sylvia immediately went up to her.

Sherry continued throwing up for quite a while before she recovered.

"Sherry, are you okay? Did you eat something bad?"

Sherry leaned against the wall feebly and said with furrowed brows, "I don't think so. When you guys weren't around, I ate the food from the hospital cafeteria. I didn't order anything from outside."

A nurse who happened to pass by overheard the conversation and added, "The food in our cafeteria is prepared under hygienic conditions with the strictest protocols, so it's unlikely that you could have consumed something rancid from there. Could you have caught a cold?"

Sherry shook her head. "I don't think so. I slept with the Sylvia could not help but chuckle at the girl's comment.

Sherry smiled. "You're right, but your daddy is— "

A sudden thought rushed into her mind before she could finish the sentence, hence leaving it unfinished . In terms of looks, Odell was the perfect specimen , but John was also a handsome man.

Sherry tightened her lips after a sigh. She smiled and said, "Okay, I'll listen to my little Issy and give birth to this little baby."

Isabel smiled delightfully, her eyes curving into crescents. "Yay! I'm going to have another sibling!"

The little girl's delightful smile cheered Sherry up. She held the girl's chubby cheeks and kissed her repeatedly.

Sylvia smiled and also sighed a breath of relief. Abortion was harmful to a woman's body, and Sherry was extremely weak lately due to all that had happened. Since the baby was coming in a few months, Sherry would have one of her own to be by her side to fight the loneliness.
