Chapter 1471

He looked at Caprice and then asked Sherry with a smile, "Sis, who's this little angel?"

Listening to the praise her daughter received, Sherry answered with a slight delight, "She's my baby daughter."

Carl's expression was slightly disheartened.

John, who came into the room in a timely manner, noticed the slight change on Carl's face, and his lips curled up.

Carl immediately smiled and said, "My, my, that explains why the angel looks so cute."

Sherry chuckled. Her daughter was probably the prettiest girl on planet Earth.

She then said to Caprice, "Caprice, this is Uncle Sager. He's my friend."

Caprice widened her eyes blankly at Carl. "Hi, Uncle Sager."

The girl's adorable voice struck Carl's heart like Cupid's arrow. He smiled brightly and said, "Hello, Caprice."

It was then that the owner of the restaurant came over and saw them talking. The owner asked in surprised delight, "Master Stockton, you know each other?"

"Are you here to help her with work?"

"No." Carl narrowed his eyes in a curve. "I'm here to see her."

Sherry furrowed her brows.

Before she could glare at Carl, John asked, "See her? Are you here to inspect her work then?"

"No. I'm just here to keep an eye on her so that she won't go looking for men behind my back."

John pursed his lips.

The atmosphere in the room somehow got awkward.

Sherry glared at Carl. "Carl, you better shut-"

"Are you two having a relationship? Why would she go looking for other men behind your back?" John asked, interrupting Sherry.

Carl narrowed his eyes further and locked eyes with John. "Master John, you have no idea. Sister Sherry here is actually my future wife."

She looked at Sherry, seemingly hesitant about going to her father, but it only lasted for two seconds before she crawled over.

Sherry frowned as she watched the car drive further away.

It was only when an extra jacket was hung over her shoulder that she realized Carl had come chasing after her.

It was her own jacket that she had left in the room.

Sherry looked at him. “Carl, what the hell was that?”

She did promise Madam Sager to help Carl strengthen his position in the company and that she would fake an engagement with him before he took over the company. However, no one should know about their fake engagement.

Carl looked rather agitated. A hint of loneliness flashed in his eyes, but he quickly recovered to his usual frivolous expression. He smiled and said, “Come on, don’t be mad. I just want to help you test the man.”

Sherry was deeply annoyed. “Why are you testing him?”

“You came all the way here to Glenchester for him, so at least I have to know what his feelings are for you, am I right?”

Sherry frowned. “I came here for Caprice, not him!”

Sherry frowned. "The engagement won't happen for now."

For now?

He squinted coldly. "So, it's happening soon?"

Sherry averted his gaze. "I don't know."

John took a step closer to her. He stared into her eyes and asked, "What do you mean you don't know?"

Sherry averted his gaze once more. "There's still a lot of time to figure it out. I don't know if I'll remain single, or if I'll marry someone in the future."

John curled his lips. It was not an ominous and frosty smile but a bright and relieved one.

"Come out," he said.

Sherry was stunned.

Then, the chubby Caprice came out from the closet beside them.

Sherry's eyes gleamed. "Caprice!"

First of all, the girl loved to sleep, so no story was needed to lullaby her.

Secondly, the man was always busy. Even though he had the girl by his side all the time, he rarely spent time playing with her.

His gaze shifted as he continued listening.

Some time later, Sherry stopped reading the story.

Caprice must be asleep.

After some rustling, it went silent.

The man put the phone aside and went to bed.

Sherry did not expect this day would arrive so quickly. She had no idea what could have gotten into John that made him leave Caprice with her.

John patted Caprice's head and answered expressionlessly, "Caprice missed her mother, and she insisted on coming last night. So, I stayed a night with her."

Carl's smile froze. "Sister Sherry snores when she sleeps. I wonder if she bothered you and Caprice last night."

John narrowed his eyes but his smile remained. "She slept well last night. You don't need to worry about that, Young Master Sager."

Carl choked on the answer he got and pursed his lips helplessly.

John smiled and continued, "But she slept rather late last night, and she's still not awake. If you are not in a hurry, I would suggest coming back later."

Carl awkwardly smiled. "Great. I stay in this hotel as well, so I can see her every single day. I don't need to rush things."

"I see... Well, I have something else to attend to. Please excuse me." ""

"Take care, Master Stockton."

John carried Caprice and walked forward. The moment he walked past Carl, his handsome face was shrouded in gloom, and the smile disappeared.

Back in the quiet suite, Sherry finally opened her eyes an hour later.

The first thing she did was look beside her, but there was no one there. She was the only one on the spacious bed; Caprice was nowhere to be found.

Sherry stayed at the hotel for the entire morning.

After clearing some of her jobs, she started to miss her daughter. The warm feeling of holding her daughter to sleep last night left her longing for more, and she wished she could hug the little angel in her arms immediately.

A quick thought later, she texted John.

"Master Stockton, are you free later?"

Two minutes later, John replied, "No."

Sherry pursed her lips. "Can I see Caprice?"

"She's too busy to see you. "

"What is she doing? Why is she that busy?"

John ignored her this time on purpose, leaving her frowning.

Sherry's eyes flickered.

Maybe because her patience was worn out after days of fruitless waiting, she suddenly decided to come out from hiding. She crossed her arms and stared back at him arrogantly.

John smiled and strode over to her.

Sherry sat on the ground, leaned back on the wall, and refused to move.

Soon, his slender and towering figure arrived before her eyes, shadowing the light from her sight.

"What are you doing here, Sherry?"

His hands pocketed in his trench coat as he looked down at her condescendingly. “No money to buy food, or are you trying to experience what a homeless person feels like?”

Sherry glared at him. “Where’s Caprice? I want to see her!”

“Caprice is too busy to see you.” John then turned around and headed to the parking lot.

Sherry bolted up and chased after him. “Where did you send her? Why is she so busy?”

The girl did not need to go to school, so how could she be busy? It had been days since she saw her daughter.

His towering figure entered the car and slammed the door shut.

The driver was already on standby.

John held Sherry down and said coldly, "Drive."

The driver drove off immediately.

John chuckled and tugged Sherry into his arms.

Sherry tried to struggle as soon as she was pushed into the car, but when he tugged her into his arms, she was once again stunned.

Before she could react, the man took his glasses off and revealed his handsome face in front of her. Her lips were instantly shut.

An hour of squatting later, she spotted the silver MPV coming out.

Her gaze shifted. She bolted up and wanted to run over to the man, but due to an hour of squatting, her legs were numb. Her sudden rise caused her to lose her balance, and when coupled with the numbed legs, she fell down.

The silver MPV drove off like the wind in front of her eyes?

Sherry was left speechless. She simply lay on the ground without the slightest intention to get up.

Inside the silver MPV, the driver and Peter dared not even breathe loudly as things got tense.

Caprice was in her father's arms while wearing a beautiful red dress. She curled her arms around her father's neck and looked out of the rear window.

It was dark outside. She could barely spot a thing.

She then looked at her father and said meekly, "Daddy, I thought I saw someone fall down."
