Chapter 1501

Sherry looked straight into his eyes. "Caprice is already two years old. You can't just keep her with you all the time. You're busy, and you won't have the time to accompany her."

John looked at Caprice. "Caprice, do you want to go out with Mommy?"

Sherry smiled at Caprice brightly and added, "Caprice, I'll bring you to the amusement park later. There are fantasy rides, theme parks, handsome boys, and beautiful girls. It's going to be fun."

Maybe because of Sherry's bright smile, or maybe because the mention of handsome boys and beautiful girls captivated her, Caprice's eyes gleamed with interest. She hummed an eager reply.

Sherry immediately carried the girl from John's grip and even raised a brow to tease him.

John smiled. He then looked at Aunt Wanda and said, Aunt Wanda, you should go with them. And bring Jason along."

Aunt Wanda nodded with a smile. "I'll go inform Jason right away."

John then looked at Sherry. "Don't go wandering around the wrong places with her. Remember to send me a picture every hour and tell me where you are."

Sherry was exalted. She nodded happily and said, "Gotcha."

Although his voice contained obvious delight, he sounded warm. If she did not know any better, she would think that he was joking with her.

Sherry pursed her lips and answered, "Yes, yes, I'll send you the pictures right now, sir." She hung up the phone immediately. Then, she took a picture of Caprice sleeping in Queenie's arms and sent it to him.

John replied almost instantly, "Why is Caprice asleep?"

Sherry rolled her eyes. The man must be trying to pick a fight. How could a little girl not be tired after playing for the whole day?

"She's sleeping because she's sleepy," Sherry replied.

"Why is she sleepy?"

The voice message was brief but in a flirtatious tone. He repeated it again and again. His eyes and lips curved in delight as he enjoyed the pleasure her voice brought him.

After leaving the amusement park, Sherry and Queenie brought Caprice home.

The car drove in through the gates and went straight to the house that Sherry and John were living in.

Caprice was still sound asleep with her face slightly pink.

Sherry carried her out of the car and went inside with Queenie and Aunt Wanda.

As soon as Sherry stepped into the living room, she saw Julie who sat elegantly on the couch in her aquamarine dress. Although she had a kind smile on her face, Sherry felt like she was looking at the female owner of the residence.

Well, Julie had always been in charge of the Stocktons ' residence.

"Julie, what brings you here?" Queenie asked out of curiosity.

Julie stood up with a smile. "I'm here for Ms. Fowler." She then turned her attention to Sherry.

Sherry looked straight into her eyes and said, "What's the matter?"

"I told her, but she refused," Julie said with a sigh.

"Hmph! She just came back into the family, and she's already keeping my granddaughter from me. If she continues to stay under this roof, there won't be any place for me and you in the future," Madam Stockton grumbled in anger and disgust.

Julie immediately consoled her, "Mother, you shouldn't say something like that. John will never do that."

Madam Stockton argued, "His mind is full of that wretched woman! He has forgotten about his mother!"

It was then that a noise came from the living room next door.

Madam Stockton's gaze shifted, and she curled her lips.

Julie pursed her lips and exchanged a quick glance with Madam Stockton.

The two ladies then went closer to the wall to eavesdrop.

In the living room next door, Sherry saw two familiar faces as soon as she walked in: Matthew and Janine.

Matthew sat down on the couch and said with furrowed brows, "Sherry, I have to admit that we did you wrong before, but we Fowlers aren't on the same level as the Stocktons. You saw what happened to your sister. I don't want you to end up like her."

"She's not my sister. She's a murderer who tried to kill me. She's in jail because of attempted murder. It's not because of the Stocktons," Sherry reminded them sternly.

Although Shannon was deeply carried away by the fame and reputation of being Mrs. Stockton, the direct reason that put her behind bars was her attempt on Sherry's life. Had she not tried to kill Sherry, she would not have ended up in jail.

Julie and Madam Stockton grew serious when they heard Sherry.

Julie said, "Mother, I didn't expect Ms. Fowler to defend us."

Madam Stockton shared the same thought as well, but after listening to Julie's words, she put on a frosty expression and said, "She's not defending us. She's just trying to argue with her father."

Both Matthew and Janine reacted poorly and their guilt made them lower their heads together.

“Though I hope that the two of you won’t appear before Sherry again. Or else I’ll be mad,” John said to them with frosty eyes.

Sherry’s eyes gleamed.

Something must have gotten wrong with the man for defending her in front of her parents.

Matthew answered immediately, “I understand. We won’t be disturbing Sherry anymore.”

Janine remained awkward and quiet, and when Matthew was done talking, she followed him out of the room.

The two of them soon disappeared beyond the gates.

It was like nine years ago when he ditched his identity as the heir to the Stockton Corporation for her.

A strange emotion erupted in her heart.

Sherry tried to pull her hand away from his grip, but it only got tighter. She looked at him and said in a small voice, "John, she's your mother. You don't need to talk to her like that because of me."

He looked at her deeply. "Then, what should I do? Listen to her and chase you out of the house?"

"That's not what I mean. Just ignore her. We got married because of the contract anyway. I don't mind."

Contract? She did not mind? Did she mean she did not care about him as well?

John curved his lips. "Sherry, I am not as heartless as you think. Even though we got married because of the contract, you are still my wife. No one is allowed to mistreat you except me."

He tightened his grip on her hand.

Sherry felt like her wrist was falling off. She pursed her lips but did not answer.

Noticing the awkwardness in the air, Queenie asked, “Mom, Brother, what’s wrong? Did you guys argue?”

John reached out to her. “I’ll carry Caprice.”

His other hand continued to hold onto Sherry’s hand.

Queenie did not want to leave her adorable niece, but she let go anyway.

John then glanced at Aunt Wanda. “Aunt Wanda, after they are done packing, send the luggage to my car.”

Aunt Wanda nodded. “Okay.”

John turned around and left with Caprice and Sherry. Madam Stockton said heavily, “It’s my fault! Okay?!”

John stopped.

Madam Stockton noticed the pause and immediately rushed to the front to explain, “Don’t leave. Sherry doesn’t need to leave anymore. I won’t chase her away again. Is that okay?”

John’s gaze softened. He looked at Sherry.

She thought he hated her.

If so, why would he treat her like this?

Was it because she became his wife?

Then, she realized he was still holding her hand. She tugged it and said in a small voice, "No one is here anymore. You can let go of my hand now."

John looked down at her hand. He loosened his grip but did not fully release her. He rubbed the back of her hand with his thumb.

The ticklish feeling caused Sherry to pull her hand back immediately.

John curved his lips. "Soft hands."

Sherry playfully glared at him. "Sure, my hands are soft compared to yours."

The moment her words subsided, she felt a warm sensation across her face as he stroked her face.

Sherry widened her eyes at him.

The man curved his lips wider into an enchanting smile and said, "Indeed, they're quite soft."

Julie's eyes gleamed but she said, "Mother, please calm down. That's not what Queenie meant."

Madam Stockton was furious. "If that's not what she means, then what does it mean? She's like her brother. They've been enchanted by that woman!"

Queenie furrowed her brows. She was not here to argue with her mother. She was here to try to explain the situation.

Sherry came back after all these years, and her brother finally regained his smile, so she really hoped that nothing would happen to the family again.

She took a deep breath and sat down beside her mother. She held her mother's hand and said, "Mom, I know I'm not smart, but Brother is a smart man. How could he be enchanted by Sherry that easily?"

It was the first time Madam Stockton heard her daughter comforting her. The surprise somehow calmed her down.

Queenie noticed her mother calming down, so she continued, "Mom, Brother and Sherry are already married, so just stop trying to break them up. Okay?"

Madam Stockton frowned. Even though she disliked Sherry, John protected her well, and it rendered her helpless. She glanced at Queenie and said, "I know. I don't need a little rascal like you to remind me."
