

Master Odell 1521

Chapter 1521

John looked at her. His expression turned serious as he said, "I'm sorry. It was a mistake."

Sherry had no idea if the man was faking it, but listening to his words made her feel awkward.

Then, his handsome face moves closer to hers, causing her to instinctively lean back. The man pinched her chin and locked lips with her several times.

Sherry was stunned. She might not be a narrow-minded person, but this public display of affection was a first, especially in front of her friend, Sylvia.

Her face uncontrollably turned red.

When John finally released her, she glared at him.

"Don't be mad. I'll win it back for you." He sounded like he was really trying to console her, especially when he stroked her cheek gently while saying that.

Sherry pursed her lips and swallowed her scolding for him.

Soon, John put the three dice on the table again.

Odell said, "Small."

John lifted the dice cup.

Sherry was dumbfounded.

She choked on her rising grief. Just when she was about to punch him, he grabbed her hand and spoke gently to her ears, "Believe me. I'll get it right this time."

Sherry's gaze flickered, and the grief and anger disappeared.

How could he be so sure?

Could she have gotten it wrong?

Sherry remained skeptical. She lowered her voice and whispered, "If you get it wrong this time, I'll bite you to death."

John tapped her hand to assure her.

Sherry angrily said, "Did you do it on purpose?"

The couple walked towards Liam and Caprice.

Liam saw them and greeted them indifferently, "Uncle John, Aunt Sherry."

Both John and Sherry responded with a smile.

John then said to Caprice, who was still lying down on Liam's lap, "Caprice, come here. We'll take you out for some fun. You're disturbing Liam."

The moment John's words subsided, Liam helped the girl up.

Caprice was like a marshmallow as she went limp and leaned back on Liam. She pouted and said, "Caprice doesn't want to go out. Caprice wants to play with Liam."

John choked upon hearing her words.

Sherry then said, "Caprice, Liam has his own things to do. He can't play with you all day."

Caprice leaned on Liam's shoulder and grumbled, "Caprice is not playing. Caprice just wants to be with Liam."

Sherry did not know how to react or what to say.

The rooms were already booked for the two families.

Each family had their own suite.

To everyone’s surprise, even when they were about to go back to their respective rooms, Caprice refused to be separated from Liam.

Liam stared at her, but she remained clingy and she stared at her father with a pleading gaze.

Sherry pursed her lips helplessly.

Both Sylvia and Odell tried their best in holding back their laughter.

Sylvia then said, "Master Stockton, why don't Sherry and I stay with the kids for the night? You and Odell can take the other suite."

Each suite had multiple rooms, so it was more than enough.

"Great!" Sherry cried in delight.

John glanced at her.

Odell also frowned. "Sylvia, Isabel and Flint are naughty. You can't possibly take care of them together by yourselves."

She put the phone by her ear and grumbled, "Mom, why are you calling me at this hour?!"

From the other side of the phone, Madam Stockton's voice clearly sounded annoyed when she heard her daughter's tone. "It's late! What are you doing outside with your brother and Caprice?"

Queenie was stunned.

"Didn't John tell you that we're staying here for the night? We'll come back tomorrow afternoon."

Madam Stockton gulped nervously. "You guys are staying there with the Carters?!"

"Yeah. I was already sleeping before you called me!"

"Why didn't you tell me earlier?!" Madam Stockton sounded angry.

Annoyed, Queenie said, "I thought Brother told you."

Madam Stockton choked on her emotions. "Where's Caprice? Where is she?"

Julie was beside her when the call ended. She asked, "Mother, what's wrong? What did Queenie say? Are they staying outside?"

"Yeah. They are already resting."

Julie

carefully sized up Madam Stockton's expression. She furrowed her brows and said, "Why didn't John say anything about it?"

"Hmph! John is bedazzled by that woman again. Of course, she's badmouthing me in front of my son!"

"I'm sure she won't, Mother. Even if Sherry did say something, John is still your son, your own blood. He won't abandon you."

"He

won't abandon me, alright, but look at how many days has it been? Ever since I brought Sherry's parents here, I didn't even get the chance to see Caprice, let alone hold her!"

The more

Madam Stockton thought about it, the angrier she was. "It's the weekend! They are off work, and they could've stayed home with Caprice. I thought I could spend some time with my granddaughter, but they just had to go out and spend the night outside! UGH!" Madam Stockton exhaled strongly.

Julie gently patted her back and calmed her down. "Mother, please calm down. John went out because the Carters came over."

Her expression eased when she heard Odell's name. Although she disliked Sherry and Sylvia, Odell was the CEO of Carter Corporation, and John should spend more time with him for potential Isabel and Flint also went back to their parents whereas Queenie went over to Sherry.

Only Caprice remained clinging to Liam’s sleeve.

The parents of both children looked at them. The girl was having a hard time leaving the boy.

John furrowed his brows momentarily and then curved his lips into a smile. He said softly, “Caprice, Liam has to go back to Westchester with his family. We should go home as well.”

Caprice pouted. Her expression turned sour, and she hugged Liam tightly, burying her face into his chest.

John was left speechless.

Sherry lips twitched helplessly. She said, “Caprice, Liam has to go back with his family. It’s getting late, so it’s time to let him go. I’ll bring you to Westchester to visit him when we have the time, okay?”

Sherry flushed. "What are you looking at?"

John wickedly grinned and narrowed his eyes. "Do you want me to wipe it off for you?"

Caprice's weeping had left tears and snot on Sherry's chest.

Sherry glared at him. "No thanks!" She then carried Caprice into the car.

John chuckled and followed them inside.

Queenie captured the little interaction from the side and pursed her lips. She was the last one to get into the car.

Sherry then went inside the house, and Jason followed.

Madam Stockton noticed there was no one else in the front yard, so she came out and walked back to her own place.

A few steps later, she saw Julie waiting for her at the corner.

Julie smiled and said, "Mother, I heard John came back with Ms. Fowler and Caprice. Are you here to see them?"

Madam Stockton's expression turned frosty and said with annoyance, "Indeed, I saw them."

Julie went up to her and said out of concern, "Then, why are you walking back?"

Madam Stockton did not want to tell Julie that she was almost exposed for watching from afar, so she simply said, "Caprice was sleeping, so I came back."

Julie's eyes flickered. "What about John? What did he and Ms. Fowler say to you?"

Madam Stockton did not even meet him. If Sherry had not badmouthed her in front of John, the mother-and-son relationship would not be this tense, and she would not need to peek from afar just to have a glance at Caprice.
