Chapter 1551

John curled his lips and tightened his grip.

His hand clamped onto Sherry's wrist like a handcuff, so there was no way she could break free.

Sherry looked at him shyly, "What are you doing? Let me go!"

"Sherry, that's my question. What are you doing, touching my hand in the middle of the night?"

Sherry blushed. She averted his gaze and grumbled, "No one is touching your hand! It's cold and your collar is opened. I'm just worried that you might get a cold, so I thought I'd help you with it..."

John chuckled. "So, I should thank you?"

"You don't need to thank me. Just take your hands off me."

John smiled. He tightened his grip once more, so she was pulled closer to him. Any closer and she would touch Caprice sleeping in the middle.

She frowned and grumbled in a small voice, "Stop it! You're gonna wake Caprice!"

The night was quiet.

The man and woman lay together intimately in the dark room.

Sherry suddenly stopped struggling and her body started to lose strength. She wanted to lie on top of him, but he suddenly let go of her.

Her sanity immediately pulled her back from her pleasure, and she quickly moved away from him. Her face blushed as she glared at him with teary eyes.

However, in the man's eyes, she was like a beautiful flower covered in morning dew, looking charming and pitiful.

He gulped nervously. He pursed his lips and stroked her face softly and said, "Why are you looking at me like that? Do you want me to kiss you again?"

Sherry's eyes flickered nervously. She tapped his hand and crawled back to her spot, burying herself under the blanket and turning her back on him.

Sherry asked, "Do you want to come with us?"

Queenie's eyes gleamed, but she shook her head. "No thanks. I have something else to do today."

"Okay."

The car door opened and Sherry went in with Caprice; John followed. The silver MPV then drove off.

Madam Stockton then asked, "Queenie, what plans do you have for the day?"

"Nothing."

"Then, why didn't you follow them?" Madam Stockton complained. She wanted her daughter to keep an eye out for Caprice.

Queenie said, "They are going out as a family, so why do I have to follow them? I don't want to be the third wheel."

Madam Stockton got irritated. She glared at Queenie and grumbled, "If you don't have any plans, I'll arrange a date for you with the guy Aunt Doreen introduced. He came to Glenchester yesterday. I'll contact them and you will meet him in the Sherry called her, "Caprice, Daddy is tired. Why don't I carry you instead?"

Caprice finally looked at her and put her hands out.

However, John said, "Daddy is not tired."

Caprice retracted her hands, and Sherry grumpily stared at him.

As though he noticed her sour expression, John looked at her with a smile. "I'm taller than you. Caprice can see further if I carry her," he explained why he did not let her carry Caprice.

Sherry's eyes flickered.

Caprice then grumbled, "Daddy, up, up!"

Up?

Sherry was slightly confused by what that meant.

John then carried Caprice higher and sat her down on his neck.

He carefully and gently carried Caprice from Sherry's arms.
Sherry was confused by his gentle movements. Was it to prevent waking her up?
As the question lingered in her mind, his scent came closer again and his strong arms wrapped around her.
Soon, Sherry was carried out of the car.
The chilly wind was unforgiving outside the car, but the man's strong arms and broad shoulders shielded her from the cold.
Her heart raced. She never thought the man would carry her out of the car. Given his temper and character, should he not wake her up inside the car?
What was with the kindness? The question caused her annoyance and anxiety.
She hoped he did not hear her pounding heart.
A while later, the surroundings got warmer. She was carried into the living room, and she even heard John speaking to Aunt Wanda.

For some reason, she had a feeling that the man prepared the grill just for her.

John raised a brow at Sherry’s stillness. “What’s wrong? Don’t want to eat? Then, I’ll tell them to bring the things back inside.”

“No! Wait! Yes! I’ll go right now!”

He had already prepared the grill, so why not just enjoy it rather than let the effort go to waste?

Sherry got up from the bed and strode outside but was stopped at the door by the man. He put his hand behind her neck and tugged her closer into his arms.

Sherry was forced to lean on his chest, and before she could react, he said in his deep voice, “Put on a jacket before you go out.”

Julie sat elegantly on the couch, enjoying her fruit tea and pastries.
When she heard Mia's update, her expression turned frosty.
John already went out with the mother and daughter for the whole day, yet he came back and prepared the grill for the woman?
What did the uneducated woman from a rural village do to deserve the man's care and love?
Mia noticed her master's expression, and out of annoyance, she added, "Madam, I even saw Jason and Aunt Wanda eating with them. Ms. Fowler has really ruined the rules around here. I don't know why Master Stockton likes her so much."
Julie grunted but quickly recovered her composure. She thought of the collaboration between the Stocktons and the Sagers and the fact that John and Sherry did not have sex at night.
She added, "Did you find the seam on the wall leading to John's backyard?"

Sherry came out from the bathroom with John and Caprice.

The leftovers and the plates on the table were kept away, and so was the grill outside the corridor. All that was left in the front yard was a layer of snow.

Caprice wanted to play, so Sherry held the girl's hand and had fun in the front yard for a while.

After playing for a while, Sherry brought the girl inside, fed her dinner, and continued playing in her room.

Later that night, Sherry read the girl a few more stories before putting her to bed.

Sherry then washed up and changed into her pajamas before she lay back down beside Caprice.

As soon as she settled down, a towering figure came in from the door. The man wore blue satin pajamas but had intentionally left a few buttons open.

Sherry's eyes gleamed.

John curved his lips at her. His handsome face looked extremely gentle yet bewitching with his smile.

Although the pictures were in different sizes, they were all of a single man.

The pictures captured the man in different events and places, some in formal wear, and some in casual clothes. There was not a single picture that showed the man’s face, but they all managed to capture his exquisite presence and elegance.

The man in the pictures was John.

Julie’s expression softened when she entered the secret room. She walked to the center of the room where there was a wax statue of John at the exact same height.

The handsome suit, the golden-framed glasses, and the hyper-realistic texture of John’s handsome face really made her feel like John was indeed standing before her.

The subtle smile on the statue’s face set off his presence.

Julie went up to the wax statue and looked at it with an infatuated gaze. Then, she undressed, tiptoed to hug the statue, and kissed it on the lips.

A few days went by since then.

On this particular day, Sherry was woken up by her own alarm. She was afraid that the alarm might wake Caprice, so she bolted up as soon as it rang to turn it off.

Sherry lost the mood to argue with John. She quickly carried the girl into her arms and consoled her.

"I'm sorry, Caprice. Mommy was loud, wasn't I? Did I scare you?"

Caprice nodded pitifully.

Sherry stroked her cheeks and said softly, "Mommy was being loud at Daddy, not you. But I promise you I won't speak so loudly in front of you anymore."

Caprice pouted and nodded. "Mommy, don't be loud to Daddy too."

Sherry had no resistance to the girl's adorable voice, especially when she was her precious daughter.

She nodded and said, "Alright. Mommy won't be loud to Daddy anymore."

It was impossible for her not to be angry with John, but at least she had to keep her temper from Caprice.

Caprice finally regained her composure after getting her mother's assurance.

Sherry picked up the spoon and continued feeding her. She had a glance at John and saw the man smiling mischievously. It was as though he was challenging her to be loud at him in front of their daughter again.

After breakfast, Sherry hitched a ride in John's car to go to the studio while he brought Caprice back to his office.
