Chapter 1791

She clearly remembered the flower was different when she sent Queenie and Madam Stockton out.

John went silent for a moment. "Someone came to visit and brought flowers."

"Who?"

"Someone you don't know," he said plainly.

"Oh."

It was probably his contact in Coastrock that she did not know of.

Sherry was not overly bothered. She walked to Caprice's side and sat down.

Caprice suddenly said, "Daddy, I want to video-call Liam."

He checked the time to make sure Liam was free before he pulled up Liam's contact number. He then passed his phone to Caprice, "Here."

Her heart raced out of control. It took her a while to recover and avert her gaze. She said, "Stop trying to trick me."

The Stockton Corporation was a lot younger than the Sagers Corporation since John only started building it in Glenchester a few years ago.

However, under his leadership, the company grew rapidly and exceeded the Sagers in terms of expansion and overall strength. The company's potential for future growth was immeasurable.

Besides, John invested a lot of effort in the company. Would he really be willing to give her the entire company?

"I will give it to you if you want it," he said.

Sherry's eyes flickered. "I'm doing good here."

As soon as her words subsided, his slender fingers lifted her chin. He delicately turned her face to him. He wore a bewitching smile on his face and his eyes looked gentle. "Sherry, I'm being serious here."

Sherry's eyes gleamed again. "I didn't say you were lying."

"Then, are you willing to say yes?" He looked into her eyes.

Liam's cool voice came from the phone. "I'll show you again."

Caprice nodded happily.

The two of them only spoke twice in the past five minutes. The topic was a mystery.

However, Caprice's lips were curled all the way, and she was really enjoying herself.

Noticing something out of the blue, Sherry looked at John. "Has Caprice been calling Liam often?"

"Yeah."

Sherry narrowed her eyes.

Liam was a cool boy. He never really got close to people other than his family, yet he had the patience to deal with Caprice's affection.

Caprice was a strange girl as well. In terms of appearance, Liam was indeed handsome, but his younger brother, Flint, was just as good-looking and had a brighter personality.

Flint was also around the same age as Caprice, yet the girl did not even bat an eyelid at him. She just loved to be around Liam or stare at him through the screen.

Her charming eyes looked pure, unlike the women he saw in nightclubs.

She would never oversell her looks and treated people with sincerity. She had strong perseverance and a heart of gold, which played a key role in winning the clients' hearts to secure the projects.

She was good at drinking as well. She once had a drinking competition with a client in an after-work meeting, and the client was knocked out cold.

She was unlike other women that he met.

After she came into his life, he stopped going to nightclubs and severed all ties with the women that he slept with.

It had been a few years since they first met. Even though there were still people who called him a playboy, he had never touched a woman since the first day of knowing her.

It was not because he did not want to have women in his company, but other than Sherry, no other females were able to match his standards anymore.

He really liked her.

In contrast, Sherry's image of him never changed since day one. He remained the playboy that she assumed he was and kept toying with him.

He pursed his lips and continued gulping down the bottle of wine.

As the wine entered his throat, he heard footsteps approaching. He opened his blurry eyes and looked out of the living room.

When Carl finally cleared his mind, he went into the study, which he seldom entered. He turned on the computer and started to go through the stack of documents by the side.

If he could improve himself, maybe Sherry might look at him differently in the future and fall for him.

Besides, with past experience, Sherry might not stay married to John forever. They might really get another divorce someday.

As long as he improved himself and gained the capabilities to rival John, he might stand a chance to win her back.

Later that night in Sherry's apartment, Sherry played around with Caprice after dinner. She then bathed the girl and put her into bed.

After Caprice was finally asleep, she went out to the living room and saw John reading on the couch.

Sherry had forgotten that the man had OCD.

Ten years ago, when she lived with him in a cheap apartment, the man bought three pairs of socks for ten dollars and washed them before he wore them.

Annoyed, Sherry asked, "Then, what do you want?"

"I don't know. What do you suggest?"

Sherry bolted up to him, glared at him, and said, "If you don't come up with a way, you are sleeping outside tonight!"

John pursed his lips. "Fine with me." He then walked past her and headed to the door.

As he moved past her, Sherry saw the scar on his back. He had recovered from the stab, but it left a scar on his body.

Her heart clenched all of a sudden. "Hold on!"

He stopped and turned around to her.

"Come over here."

Before her kick could land, he caught her leg with his large hand. The warmth from the tip of his fingers burned her ankle as he caressed her.

Sherry blushed. "Get your hand off my leg!"

John released her ankle as told, but then he grabbed her calf next. His naughty fingers started to dance on her sensitive calf softly. The touching slowly turned into rubbing and with the right amount of strength, it felt comfortable.

Sherry's eyes flickered.

John looked at her and noticed her lifted mood. "How does it feel?"

Sherry turned away shyly. "It's okay."

He smiled and continued to massage her calf.

Seconds turned into minutes as the massage went on. Sherry originally wanted to tell him to stop if he was tired, but his massage was too good to stop.

After a while, she fell asleep without knowing it.

John then stopped. Looking at her blushing face, the man smiled. He laid her body straight so that she could sleep more comfortably.

Before John could come out of the room, Sherry asked Jason, "Didn't you just drop his luggage?"

Jason answered, "Yeah, but I forgot to bring the document that he asked for, so I went back for it."

"But how did you come back so fast?" Sherry thought John lived two hours away.

Jason smiled, "Master Stockton's hotel is two minutes away. It's directly opposite this building. I don't even need to drive."

Sherry was left speechless.

Opposite the building? Two-minute walking distance?

Sherry squinted.

Why did John claim that a trip back to his place would take two hours last night?

John simply smiled.

It was then that a tiny figure entered her sight from the room. Caprice had woken up without her knowledge.

The girl was in her pajamas. Her hair was messy, and she was looking at them with her big googly eyes.

"Daddy, Mommy, are you two kissing?" she asked innocently and curiously.

Sherry blushed. She choked upon hearing the question and then looked at John.

John smiled in reply. He went to Caprice and carried the girl into his arms. "Daddy and Mommy are saying good morning to each other," he said.

"Saying good morning means kissing?" the girl asked.

Sherry smirked. She was anticipating John's made-up excuse.

John smiled and then said, "You can choose to kiss or not when you say good morning. You can only kiss people that you like and cannot do it to people you are not close with. Got it?"

Sherry gulped. "In the workplace, there's only the superior and the employee, no Young Master Carl or whatever."

"Hmph. Fine." He chuckled and stepped aside.

Sherry continued forward, but when she walked past him, he held her wrist. She was caught off guard.

He looked at her with his beautiful eyes and said softly, "Sis, if you really want to go, can you stop calling me Mr. Sager?"

Sherry's eyes flickered. "Okay."

Carl smiled and released her wrist.
