

Chapter 79

Sophia stared at Bryan's back until he got in Edger's car and left. Bryan's driver started the car and drove in the direction of her house.

In order to suppress her smile, Sophia bit the bottom of her lip. The manner in which he lowered himself toward the window a short while ago almost caused her to lose her breath.

She had no idea how they became so close that he started to talk so softly with her. Today, he did not show any signs of rage. In fact, he came closer to her.

Slowly, she raised her hand and brought it to her neck. She let out a deep breath while thinking about how his nose touched her neck when they were in his cabin. If Abraham had not called at that time, who knew what was on Bryan's mind?

Leaning her back against the seat, she closed her eyes. There was a sheepish smile on her face, which she wanted to hide from the whole world.

In all of the walls of her heart, there was only one person's face that started to become clear, and that name was—

'Bryan.'

He was now in her imagination and dreams. Her wolf was only howling out one name, and that was the name of her mate.

It was not because of the mate bond, but she did end up falling in love with Bryan. She lost her heart to him.

She recalled Bryan's words that he told her today. Assuring her that he was not a womanizer, he made it clear that she would not have to think about the possibility of him connecting with another woman. Not only that, he almost confessed his feelings for her by saying that she caught his attention and he did not want to let her go.

"Miss, we arrived at your home." The driver spoke out.

Sophia opened her eyes and realized that she had been drawn into Bryan's thoughts so that she could not feel when the car stopped moving.

"Thank you," she remarked with a grin to the driver and a pleasant tone of voice.

Despite the fact that the driver was a young man, it appeared as though he had been working for Bryan for a considerable amount of time.

It seemed as though he was taken aback by her kind behavior. He had the impression that the woman who was receiving Alpha's attention would be the one to be arrogant.

After giving her a slight nod of his head, he exited the vehicle and then opened the door for her.

She got out of the car and walked toward her house. As she was going to use her keys to unlock the door, she noticed someone opening the door from inside.

"Sophia," her mother said the moment she opened the door.

She gave her mother a hug before accompanying her into the house. Today, her mother appeared to be in a high mood.

"What's the matter, Mom? Is there something special?"

"No, my baby. Your brother called me today."

"Oh, that's good news." Sophia said as she took a seat on the couch with her mother.

"What did he say?" she asked.

"He was asking about you."

"Mom, did you tell him about..."

"No. I didn't. I told him that you were doing a job for another company. He asked me why I allowed you to go without thinking about your safety. I said my friend's son is also working there, and he took care of you."

Sophia sighed while shaking her head. "Mom, no one is my babysitter."

Her mother stroked her head and replied,

"You know I had to say something to your brother. As you told me, I didn't tell him about your job at Morrison Group."

"Thank you, Mom." I embraced her.

They had dinner while talking about how they could surprise Abraham when he returned home.

"Your brother was saying that Alpha promised to train him. Because he was having difficulties with some of his practice, Alpha gave him assurance about it. We are blessed to have an Alpha like him," Sophia's mother said to her.

Sophia chewed her food while smiling. "You are right. We are blessed."

Within her heart, she had the feeling that she was extremely fortunate to have him as her mate.

After saying good night to her mother, Sophia went to her room. Having changed out of her dress and into her pajamas, she then climbed onto the bed.

As soon as she closed her eyes, she began to recall everything that had occurred over the day. When she thought about the increasing closeness that she and Bryan had developed toward one another, she covered her face with her blanket.

She tried to sleep so that tomorrow she would not be late to go to Bryan's house.

When she opened her eyes, she yawned and glanced outside the window. Her eyes widened as she sat up and hurriedly grabbed her phone to check the clock.

Upon seeing that she had not gotten up late, she exhaled a sigh of relief and relaxed her shoulders.

She went to take a shower and wore a dress for the meeting. She went downstairs and found that her mother had just woken up.

"Mom, I have to go to the office directly today."

"What about your breakfast?"

"I'll have breakfast in the company, Mom. Now, bye. I don't want to be late," she said, giving a kiss on her mother's cheek.

"Take care."

Her mother waved her hand at her while standing at the door. Sophia called a cab and made her way to Bryan's residence.

After getting out of the cab, she paid the driver and glanced at the guards.

They stopped her at the gate, but when she showed them her company's ID card, they realized that she was Bryan's personal secretary. They opened the door and let her enter the house.

When Sophia entered the house, she discovered that there was complete silence throughout the entire house. She turned her head to the guard who was outside the house.

"Where is Alpha?"

"He is sleeping in his bedroom."

"Oh."

She glanced around and then asked again,

"Where are the maids?"

"Last night, Alpha's mother fell sick. So Alpha sent all of his maids to her."

It came as a complete surprise to Sophia when she learned about Bryan's mother. Was she okay?

Though she had behaved really badly with her, she still cared for her since she was Bryan's mother.

When she began to walk, the guard closed the door from outside. He did not lock the main gate but only closed it.

When Sophia switched her attention to the stairs, she remembered that she had forgotten to ask about Bryan's bedroom.

She went upstairs and entered the room first, where Bryan let her stay when she was drunk.

He was not in that room, which disappointed her. One by one, she closed three doors and did not find Bryan's bedroom.

When she noticed the last door, she walked to it and opened the door without knocking, as she was bored with the process of finding his room.

But when she opened the door, a master bedroom appeared in her sight.

She did not get a chance to look around since her eyes directly landed on the man who was sleeping on the bed.

She gulped when her eyes fixed on the man. Bryan was sleeping on his chest as his upper back was visible. His face was turning to the opposite side, so she could not see him. However, he was shirtless, and his blanket was only covering his lower back.

Looking at the perfect skin of his upper back and his strong muscles made her heart race faster.
