Chapter 242

Chapter 242 Chapter 242 So, you pushed me out and, because there were no cameras, you said I was the one who pushed Brittany, right? Paisley asked sharply.

But you did push her, didn't you? Why else would you be standing there? Christina continued to argue.

Paisley looked coldly at Christina.

Whether I pushed her or not, you know the truth, Brittany knows, and even the neighbors know.

Christina, of course, knew full well that Paisley had never pushed Brittany, and she also knew Brittany had intentionally fallen to ruin the neighbors' daughters' face.

Not only did they not pursue it, they even smiled and moved away.

Yeah, why didn't they pursue it? Paisley's eyes grew cold as she revealed the truth from back then.

It's because I paid them seventeen million dollars and promised to cover all their immigration expenses, as well as the girls' future surgeries and education.

Paisley had never told anyone from the Sullivan family about this because after her grandfather passed away, she realized that having too much money could make her a target for others.

At that time, she was too tired to deal with others.

All she ever wanted was a family.

What did you say? Christina exploded, as if those millions of dollars had been taken right from her hands.

You had that much money back then, why didn't you tell me sooner? Tell you sooner? Paisley sneered.

So you could take all my money and give it to Brittany? Hit right where it hurt, Christina didn't know how to respond and could only glare at Paisley in frustration.

Apart from these two things, there are so many others.

Every time Brittany and I had a disagreement, you never cared about who was right or wrong, you always sided with Brittany.

And now you're telling me we're family? I'm your daughter? Paisley's eyes reddened.

Even though she had gotten used to it, even though she no longer cared, she still felt like crying.

It wasn't because Christina didn't love her, but because she had never loved herself enough.

She used to think that if she gave others love, she would receive the same in return.

But that wasn't true.

Love is never reciprocal.

The only person who could return her love equally was herself.

It was just that she realized this too late.

Brittany stood behind Christina, clearly feeling the shift in the way the other ladies were looking at her.

Alarmed, she subtly tugged at Christina, hoping she would quickly come up with a solution to fix this.

Christina could also sense the change in the crowd's attitude.

She hated Paisley for making things so difficult.

What are you talking about now? Why bring up all this old stuff? What matters now is Brittany.

I need you to apologize right away.

Whether with money or any other way, just make sure they let Brittany go.

If you don't do it, don't ever call me Mom again! To Christina, this was her final trump card.

She had seen how desperately Paisley craved family and her approval, how humble she had been.

So, she didn't believe that Paisley truly didn't want her as a mother, what Paisley had just said was simply a way to express her grievances.
