

MEDICAL GOD CHAPTER 457

Lin Yueyao was rather startled. "Is this okay? What if the patient starts convulsing again?"

"Don't worry, that won't happen."

Qin Jun then proceeded to insert two more needles in two of the patient's major acupuncture points. Now, the patient couldn't move any part of his body above his neck.

After that, Lin Yueyao prepared the various tools required and they commenced the surgery.

In truth, the surgical procedure was actually quite simple. All they had to do was extract the decaying tooth and permanently kill the dying nerve. Only then will the pains in the patients neck and chest subside.

The main obstacle to the surgery before was that the patient was uncooperative. They were thus unable to carry out the normal procedure for the surgery. That was why so many specialists were left at a loss for what to do.

However, this obstacle was unexpectedly overcome by Qin Jun with such ease. All he had to do was use two needles and he could ensure that the patient wouldn't move throughout the surgery. This certainly wasn't something the average TCM practitioner could do.

All those movies showing characters immobilized by acupuncture were merely exaggerations.

Real life acupuncture in Wushu could only render an opponent temporarily weak after hitting his vital points. It certainly wasn't able to replicate those exaggerated effects on television.

However, Qin Jun had managed to do it all with the help of two more needles. Lin Yueyao was quite impressed.

“Is this part of the obscure remedy?”

Qin Jun smiled. “Hmm.”

“Is it...easy to learn?” Lin Yueyao was quite interested in picking up this skill. After all, the main problem dentists faced was ensuring that patients kept their mouths open. Sometimes, even if patients were willing to cooperate, they involuntarily closed their mouths or become nauseous when the scalpel enters their mouth.

If she could master this skill, she would be able to ensure that patients kept their mouths open. This would greatly aid whatever procedures needed to be carried out within the mouth.

However, Qin Jun shook his head apologetically. “If you don’t have the foundation, it’s quite hard to learn...”

After all, Lin Yueyao practiced Western medicine. If she were to learn acupuncture, she would have to start from scratch.

“Oh...” Although she was quite disappointed, she suddenly had a newfound faith in Qin Jun’s medical skills.

That old TCM practitioner that Qin Jun studied under must have been proficient in many obscure remedies. And Qin Jun just happened to have learnt the one which was needed for this patient.

After they completed the surgery, Qin Jun inserted a few more needles. Now that the problem inside the oral cavity had been resolved, the other complications were easier to cure.

As Qin Jun pulled out the two needles on the corners of the patient's mouth, the patient stirred awake and stared bleary-eyed at Qin Jun and Lin Yueyao.

Lin Yueyao hastily rushed forward and started lifting the patient's eyelids to check his eyes. Realizing that the patient looked much better now, she subsequently raised up three fingers and asked, "What number is this?"

The patient gulped and replied weakly, "Three..."

His could now see clearly and think coherently! He was cured!

"Lie down and rest first. I'll put you on an IV drip at once."

As the patient was still extremely weak and in desperate need of nutrition, Lin Yueyao hastily attached the IV drip to him.

Outside, Director Zhong and the other doctors had gotten rather impatient after waiting for so long. Thus, he rounded a few people and entered the operating theatre.

The moment they saw the patient on the IV drip, they were immediately flabbergasted.

They then rushed over to examine the patient with dumbfounded looks on their faces.

"He's cured?"

Lin Yueyao snorted, "Of course."

After the words left her mouth, she even rolled her eyes at him. Doctors as incapable and morally corrupt as you should be fired!

After conducting multiple examinations, Director Zhong finally concluded that the patient had indeed recovered. However, a little plot suddenly hatched inside his mind.

He then proceeded to announce to the few people he brought in, "All of you remember this! I was the one who brought this patient back to life!"
