

MEDICAL GOD CHAPTER 461

When Chief Editor Chu arrived at People's Hospital, there was a grim look on his face.

Just yesterday, he had wrongfully accused Dr. Lin of medical malpractice in the news report. Thinking back on it now, he felt the urge to slap himself for his rash and foolish actions.

He specifically asked for Dr. Lin, only to be told today was Lin Yueyao's off day. Not deterred, he immediately used his connection with the director of the hospital to call her back for the procedure.

At home watching TV, Lin Yueyao was understandably confused when she received a phone call from her director. Several seconds later, she hung up.

Tang Min asked, "What's wrong, Sweetie?"

"The hospital wants me to go back and perform surgery. The patient that was just on the news is having a relapse."

Her mother was shocked at her reply. "Seems like your cousin was right. You two better hurry then!"

Lin Yueyao stared at Qin Jun, surprised that he knew so much about this ailment.

Qin Jun quickly got dressed as well and went with her to the hospital. Although she knew the steps involved in the procedure, she did not know how to actually do it.

The two of them arrived at the hospital, only to see Chief Editor Chu waiting for them at the entrance. A few reporters were already there, cameras aimed at Lin Yueyao in anticipation.

Chief Editor Chu jogged towards them, reaching out to shake Lin Yueyao's hand and apologize.

“Dr. Lin, I’m the chief editor of China News. I’m so sorry about what happened yesterday. It was all my fault and I hope you can forgive me!”

Lin Yueyao waved her hand as she replied, “It’s fine. What’s more important now is to save the patient.”

“Okay, alright!”

Lin Yueyao hurried into the hospital, putting on her white lab coat before striding towards the operating theater. Her footsteps never faltered once.

Chief Editor Chu followed along behind her with admiration shining on his face. He muttered to himself, “This is a true doctor! Not holding a grudge despite being wrongfully blamed for something she did not do. In her mind, her patient’s health is more important than anything else. I must report this as the truth tomorrow!”

Changing into medical scrubs, Lin Yueyao and Qin Jun went inside the operating room while everyone else was barred from entering. This time, the reporters and Chief Editor Chu did not barge inside but waited outside patiently.

Stepping towards the patient, Lin Yueyao frowned when she saw the broken spoon inside his mouth.

“Won’t we hurt his tongue if we extract the pieces now?”

Using the same technique as before, he stuck a needle on each side of the patient’s mouth, causing his mouth to open wide. Next, he jabbed the pressure point on the patient’s neck, preventing him from being able to swallow anything. After that, it was a simple matter of pulling out the broken pieces with the tweezers.

Although there were some cuts in the patient's mouth, none of them were life-threatening.

Lin Yueyao was shocked when Qin Jun began stabbing needles into the patient's gums. This was the first time she had seen someone using acupuncture in the mouth.

"There are pressure points in the mouth?"

Qin Jun nodded in reply. "Even the tongue has some."

TCM really was profound and wondrous, especially the acupuncture techniques passed on from their ancestors long ago.

As Qin Jun continued his ministrations, the patient's convulsions eventually stopped.

Impressed by the effectiveness of his treatments, Lin Yueyao asked him, "Cousin, if you're so amazing, why don't you open a dental clinic?"

It seemed logical to her. Qin Jun was knowledgeable about the oral cavity of humans and dental clinics earned way more than normal clinics nowadays. It was practically the perfect match!
