The Medical Genius's Unspeakable Marriage Novel Chapter 2281

Upon hearing the request from the other party, Matthew smiled.

Is he finally willing to tell the truth?

To make someone like Casper Gallagher put down his pride, the identity of this patient must be extraordinary.

However, Matthew was more intrigued by the “rare and difficult” disease the other mentioned. “Mr. Gallagher, I’m not qualified to give you any guidance, but if you bring me the patient’s information, I can analyze it with my incompetent skills.”

He then casually snapped his fingers, and a black-clad man suddenly appeared at the door, holding a thick stack of documents in his hands, as he approached Casper

After receiving the documents, Matthew quickly flipped through them and then stood up. “Mr. Gallagher, this is not the place for discussion. Let’s go to the next room...”

That request was just what Casper wanted, but he felt regretful for the table full of precious herbal dishes.

They arrived in a quiet environment, and Matthew spent more than ten minutes quickly reviewing all the information about the patient. Then, he closed his eyes and pondered for a solution.

Perhaps because of the patient’s noble identity, the patient’s personal information was hidden in the documents. But from the patient’s condition, it could be guessed that this person must be from an extremely wealthy or influential family. As for his condition, it could mainly be divided into two aspects.

Firstly, due to excessive alcohol consumption and irregular sleep patterns, his liver function rapidly deteriorated. Secondly, excessive indulgence in sexual activity led him to have a weak kidney and kidney atrophy.

What was even more infuriating was that even though the patient knew about his physical illness, he still didn't control himself. Instead, he took a lot of medicine to replenish his libido, which worsened the condition. Not only did that weaken his organs, but the alcohol also eroded his central nervous system, leading to neurological disorders.

"Mr. Larson, can you talk about the treatment plan you're thinking of providing?" After hesitating for a while, Casper finally spoke up.

"We plan to perform surgery to repair his liver and kidney function before we repair the damaged nerves."

After listening, Matthew shook his head. Although this plan could alleviate the condition, it was not a fundamental solution. Moreover, the risks were extremely high because any accident could endanger the patient's life.

"I can offer two suggestions from the alternative medicine perspective. The first is to remove the alcohol from the patient's body... If I'm not mistaken, alcohol has already invaded the blood vessels due to the deterioration of the liver. The second way can be done without surgery. I can provide you with several herbal food recipes that can repair the liver and kidneys."

After speaking, Matthew picked up the pen and paper on the table and quickly wrote down the cooking methods for the herbal dishes before handing it to Casper.

"These medicinal food recipes are specifically tailored to the patient's condition. They can regulate various functions of his body. Once his overall health improves, the liver and kidney damage will naturally repair themselves. Although the human body is fragile, it is sometimes very resilient. Of course, some herbs may be scarce, so you'll have to figure that out yourselves."

Once Casper received the recipe for those herbal dishes, he quickly skimmed through them and saw a full page filled with medicinal herbs. Although there were a few that he had never heard of, he could tell from the herbs he recognized that they were indeed targeted at treating the liver, kidneys, and nerves.

The next second, Casper called his assistant again. "Send these herbal food recipes back to the headquarters and order these to be served to the patient as soon as possible. Anyone who opposes or sabotages the idea should be fired. Under serious situations, you may handle it as you see fit."

At the end of his instructions, there was already a hint of killing intent in his tone.

At that moment, Casper's identity as a powerful person began to reveal itself.

It was completely different from his previous carefree appearance.

After handing over the recipe to the other party, Matthew raised a question that had been bothering him for a long time. "Mr. Gallagher, there's something I don't understand..."

"I know what you want to ask. There are many famous doctors in Cathay, but why did I specifically choose you?"

Seeing Matthew nod curiously, Casper smiled and shook his head. "The conflict between conventional and alternative medicine has been ongoing since the last century. Unfortunately, I am a representative of conventional medicine and have some conflicts with your country's well-known senior alternative medicine practitioners. If it weren't for the urgency of the situation and the lack of other options, to be honest, I wouldn't have come in person."

After saying that, he stretched lazily. Then, he looked at the falling leaves outside the window with eyes that were filled with contemplation.

Matthew naturally knew about the dispute between the two medical practices. Although the conflicts between the two sides have somewhat diminished over the years, the older generation of medical practitioners still look down on and despise each other.

"This patient must not have an ordinary identity, or else you wouldn't have come here so humbly."

Hearing that question, Casper simply nodded, obviously indicating that he didn't want to reveal too much.

Afterward, the two of them mostly discussed their medical insights.

Matthew thoroughly understood the topic because he had the inheritance from his ancestor and his experience in treating various illnesses.

"Although the medical practices have the same origin, it is the conflicts between the two sides that motivate the younger generation to challenge each other. But that also led them to progress in their respective fields. There are countless medical techniques, but ultimately, they are all to treat and save people. From this perspective, conflicts can actually be a good thing."

Casper's eyes lit up at Matthew's new way of comprehending things. "I didn't expect you to have a deeper understanding than our generation at such a young age."

Matthew modestly waved his hand. "Mr. Gallagher, you see too highly of me. I'm just standing on the shoulders of giants. By the way, I apologize for making you wait for so long earlier."

Upon hearing this, Casper burst into laughter. "It's alright. I've never experienced such an intense atmosphere. To be honest, it's quite an extraordinary experience. Most importantly, the knowledge of herbal food that you have taught me has enlightened me."

After saying that, Casper glanced at Matthew's expression before continuing, "After this matter is over, I will invest in a school that integrates alternative and conventional medicine. Would you be interested in taking up the position of the school dean? Of course, you can freely negotiate the terms."

The idea of establishing a school was not sudden for Casper.

He had been thinking about it for many years while engaging in the medical and business fields. However, the deep-rooted conflicts between the two fields made it impossible for truly capable alternative medicine practitioners to agree to become teachers at this school.

But Matthew was different. Not only was he highly skilled in medicine and had a broad vision, but he also didn't hold onto old grudges.

Moreover, after personally communicating with Matthew, Casper discovered that this young man had immense potential hidden within him. The power he had displayed to the world was just the tip of the iceberg.

That made Casper eager to win him over. If he could recruit such a talented man, who was just beginning to reveal his true abilities, to his conglomerate in the future, it wouldn't be a far-fetched idea to challenge the world's top companies.

However, although Casper had the intention, Matthew had no interest in whatever he proposed. Now that Matthew understood the meaning behind the other party's words, he naturally wouldn't agree to it.

"I'm sorry, Mr. Gallagher, but I still have a lot of things to handle at the moment. Besides, I'm not qualified for the position of dean. So I can only regretfully decline..."

Upon hearing this response, Casper couldn't help but feel disappointed and shook his head.

Back at the banquet, when Matthew hadn't returned after a long while, his mother-in-law, Helen, couldn't help but frown. "Sasha, who is that middle-aged man in a suit? How can he keep Matthew away for so long during such an important banquet? He's so rude."

Hearing her complaint, Sasha immediately explained, "Mom, that man is the CEO of Gallagher Medical Group, Mr. Casper Gallagher! It seems like he has something important to discuss with Matthew!"

"Oh? is he from the company that produces the anti-aging injection?"

As a woman, Helen had almost no resistance to the words "anti-aging". So she couldn't help but be extremely interested.

The high price was not a problem, but the quota was hard to obtain without connections or status. Even the rich could only watch from the sidelines.

Thinking of that, Helen got excited. Not to mention that the person in charge of the anti-aging injection was here. More importantly, the other party had something to ask from her son-in-law.

Wait... I seem to have discovered something amazing.

"I say, honey, why are you so tense? What are you doing?" James saw his wife's reaction and curiously asked.

But all he got was an impatient reply. "Just eat your food. Can't all these dishes stop you from talking?"

At Casper's side of things, they finally received a response from headquarters after waiting for a long time.

Upon hearing this news, Casper couldn't help but get excited and slapped his thigh. "Mr. Larson, thank you so much. You've done us a great favor."

Under Matthew's surprised gaze, Casper directly grabbed his hand and kept thanking him.

"Mr. Gallagher, you're flattering me. Treating illnesses and saving lives is the duty of a doctor..."

In response to Matthew's words, Casper nodded repeatedly, and his gaze became increasingly fervent.

It would be a lifelong regret for someone with such great talent to slip away from him.

With that in mind, Casper suddenly showed a determined look. "Mr. Larson, as the CEO of Casper Pharmaceutical Group, I formally invite you to be our Chief Medical Advisor. Of course, Mr. Larson, you will only need to provide advice when we encounter technical difficulties."

That position undoubtedly showed great recognition for Matthew's medical skills.

Seeming to be afraid Matthew would refuse, Casper leaned closer and whispered, “Mr. Larson, many of my subordinates are here...”

Upon hearing that, Matthew smiled. He didn’t expect that the CEO of a Fortune 500 company would have such a cute side.

In that case, Matthew could only nod and agree. “Mr. Gallagher, thank you for your trust. I will gladly accept the position...”

As he spoke, he stood up and reached out to accept the appointment letter.

Matthew had his own considerations. Perhaps someday in the future, he would want to open a clinic once everything was over. If everything went smoothly, he planned to introduce alternative medicine, which was a symbol of Cathay, to the world. By then, he might need help from Gallagher Medical Group.

With their hands clasped together, this was the first in-depth collaboration between alternative and conventional medicine in recent years.

“Well then, I’ll take my leave. If you have any questions in the future, you can contact me directly. Of course, we will look for you if we also encounter any problems.”

Looking at the ID card in his hand and the list of benefits, he couldn’t help but feel dumbfounded.

That man acts swiftly and generously...

With his position alone, he would receive a minimum annual bonus of over 7.5 million, and it was just a temporary position. He wouldn't have to do anything if there were no major issues, and the other party would still pay him that amount every year.

Matthew flicked the ID card and casually put it in his pocket before leaving the room.

On the other hand, after leaving Renew Pharmaceuticals, Casper had a satisfied smile. This trip not only resolved the prince's medical crisis, but he also won over a low-key and potentially great alternative medicine practitioner.

"Mr. Gallagher, you are giving such a precious position to such a young kid, and he's an alternative medicine practitioner. Won't the shareholders and the family have any objections?"

When Casper heard the assistant's disappointing words, his originally joyful face suddenly turned cold. "You seem to be talking a lot today!"

After that, he shot his assistant an icy gaze.

The assistant felt like his throat was gripped by a giant hand.

With a face full of cold sweat, he stammered to explain, "Please calm down, sir... I... I-I was just worried..."

Casper faintly smiled after hearing that and withdrew his imposing aura. "I must have misunderstood you then. I am glad that you're so loyal to me."

At this moment, the assistant couldn't help but breathe a sigh of relief, but Casper's next words immediately plunged him into despair.

"Well, we need an administrator for our stockpile warehouse. I will entrust this important task to you."

The stockpile warehouse sounded like a good place, but those who knew the inside story understood it was just an empty building and a completely useless and abandoned warehouse.

What's the difference between being exiled and being sent there?

However, before the assistant had a chance to ask, Casper snorted. "I keep you by my side purely because you have been with me for many years. It's not because you are outstanding or that I can't live without you. You have nothing to complain about either because the money they gave you should be enough for you to spend for a lifetime."

After Casper finished, he ignored his assistant and got into the car. "Monitor all internal movements during this period. If anyone dares to try anything, don't report to me, fire them."

His cold tone filled the entire car.

Casper was a man of virtue, but he was also decisive. Being able to be in charge of Gallagher Medical Group naturally meant he wasn't a good person.

From the passenger seat, a woman who claimed to be in her thirties responded.

Her slender fingers flew across the keyboard, recording everything the CEO said in detail. "Boss, you have wasted too much time here. We need to hurry up with our next schedule. Also, the national leader of Drioca just called and expressed his gratitude for saving his son..."

As she spoke, the woman handed a document to Casper in the back seat.

Looking at the packed schedule that was arranged for him, Casper could only rub his temples in frustration.

Three luxury cars worth millions slowly moved away.

In the meantime, only the exiled assistant was left in his original place, muttering to himself, "How did he find out about what we've done in the dark? Why did he give such an important position to a young kid? Is the kid even qualified for that position? Why?"

When Matthew returned to the banquet, most were already drunk, seemingly enjoying their last moments together.

But before he could sit down, his mother-in-law suddenly started ordering him, "Matthew, come with me!"

"What's up with you and those women?"

Following Helen's finger, Matthew saw Roxanne, Brittany, and Leanna.

"What do you mean, what's up?" Helen's sudden question rendered Matthew confused.

"How dare you ask me that? I can see that they look at you strangely, and being a woman, too, I've been in their shoes. They wouldn't look at you like that if they had no other feelings for you."

Matthew was at a loss for words.

Oh, my god! Why didn't I know my mother-in-law had such a skill?

Seeing Matthew was speechless, Helen continued to inquire, "Don't even make me talk about Leanna. She already had feelings for you when she was in Eastshire. But what's the deal with Brittany Newman? I also heard that you have an indescribable relationship with the unrivaled swordsman's female disciple. Yes! That girl! She looked at you so many times during the banquet."

At this moment, Helen was referring to Roxanne.

"Matthew, let me tell you, you have a family. Don't think that you can start having other thoughts just because you have achieved something. If you dare try something, Sasha's father and I won't let you off that easily, even if we have to risk our lives!"

In response to Helen's accusations, Matthew readily concurred and then walked behind Helen, placing his hands on her shoulders and giving her a gentle massage.

"Mom, calm down. I have nothing to do with them. Our relationship is clean and clear. Otherwise, why would I invite you, Dad, and Sasha to Bainbridge?"

With Matthew's explanation, Helen calmed down.

Upon careful consideration, she thought it made sense. If her son-in-law had any suspicious relationship with them, he wouldn't have brought them to Bainbridge because that would only cause trouble for himself.

With that, Helen's anger subsided. "I'm warning you, even though you have achieved something great, you must discipline yourself. When you need to keep your distance, do it. That is your basic responsibility as a husband, understand?"

Behind her, Matthew said with a smile, "Understood, my dear mother-in-law."

"That's more like it."

Helen left with a smile on her face after she warned Matthew, and he took out the two anti-aging injections from Casper.

The banquet continued until the afternoon. Matthew was exhausted after sending the drunk disciples from the hidden sects back to their rooms.

Herbal cuisine was supposed to be nourishing, but these wasteful people ruined it by drinking alcohol. By the time everything was cleaned up, the afternoon had passed without Matthew noticing.

From the beginning of the banquet to the end, Roxanne was unhappy the whole afternoon.

"Matthew, I'll be heading home now. By the way, I haven't congratulated you on winning the Holy Doctor Competition. Also, Grandpa said he wants you to come for a visit after you're done with your busy schedule."

Old Master Bane had also mentioned that to Matthew. After all, this was his last disciple's most glorious moment, and since many had previously criticized him for accepting Matthew as his disciple, this was the perfect opportunity to prove them wrong.

"Thank you, please tell Master Bane that I will visit in a few days..."

After nodding, Roxanne turned and left, slightly disappointed. She still held a glimmer of hope in her heart before she saw Matthew's wife.

The moon was high in the sky.

After a long journey and the nourishment of herbal cuisine, Sasha, her family, and Natalie had already fallen asleep. As for all the guests, they had all left.

On the other hand, Brittany seemed to have become more cheerful. It seemed that she was doing well while staying with Gianna. Moreover, Gianna had paid extra attention to Brittany's safety.

If he hadn't sensed it wrongly, there had to be dozens of experts protecting the courtyard during the banquet. Most of them should be Casper's subordinates, but it was not until Brittany left that the aura of the remaining ten or so experts disappeared completely.

Since everyone was resting, Matthew had nothing to do, so he decided to head to the mountain at the back to practice his martial arts. However, when he arrived at his destination, he saw a graceful figure standing quietly in the center of the lake, on top of the emerald green lotus leaves.

As the silver moonlight fell, it reflected off the water, echoing each other.

"What's wrong? Why haven't you gone to sleep yet?" Lola asked softly when she saw Matthew had suddenly appeared.

"I can't sleep, so I came here to exercise. What about you?" Matthew asked in return, but he didn't get an answer.

After a moment of silence, Lola suddenly suggested, "The moon is beautiful tonight. Would you like to enjoy it with me? It's such a good opportunity. We may never see it again if we miss it..."

"Sure!" Matthew agreed, and Lola slightly leaped off the ground. Then, like a colorful butterfly, her long dress reflected the moonlight, making her seem exceptionally beautiful, like a fairy flying in the sky.

The moon was particularly bright and round tonight.

While sitting with her knees bent, she quietly looked at Matthew. "What do you think the little monk is doing now?"

Matthew Larson laughed when she mentioned the little monk. "It's been a day and a night, so I think he has already left Bainbridge. But with his stubborn temper, he should be camping in the wilderness now,"

Matthew explained with a hint of sadness in his eyes. It had been a long time since they last saw each other. Perhaps they would never meet again in this lifetime.

Seeing Matthew's somewhat depressed mood, Lola immediately changed the topic. "What about you? What are your plans for the future? Are you going back to the South?"

Upon hearing this question, Matthew shook his head. "I'm not planning on returning there for now. On the one hand, the re-election of the Martial League is about to begin. On the other hand, I still need to help with the zombie virus issue with the CAUMP. Also, there can't be two powerful figures in one place, so as long as I stay in Bainbridge, Master Levi will always have a thorn in his heart."

Tilting her head, Lola curiously asked, "The King of the South?"

"Yes, that place is ultimately his. If I stay in the South, I won't be able to develop my own forces..." Matthew explained as he sat on the grass, casually picking up a twig and putting it in his mouth.

"By the way, are you planning to return to the Crichtons?" Matthew asked back.

At this moment, Lola had buried her head between her knees. She was at a loss for how to answer Matthew's question because, according to her original plan, she should have been on her way back by now.

"It depends... My master is still in Bainbridge, so I'll ask for his opinion when the time comes... Hey... Your wife is very beautiful!"

After suddenly bringing up Matthew's wife, Lola fell silent. Matthew didn't know how to reply either, so they ended up silently enjoying the bright moon.

They had their own thoughts that they refused to say or couldn't say. However, it was late fall, so it was gradually growing colder.

Shivering, Matthew stood up.

"It's late. Let's go back and rest early!"

Lola watched Matthew's figure gradually leave, and a trace of abnormal emotion appeared in her lively eyes. As for Matthew, his plan to practice martial arts was not fulfilled.

The night passed quietly.

The courtyard was already bustling early the next morning.

After Matthew finished washing up and walked out of the room, he saw most of the disciples from the hidden sects had already packed up their belongings, ready to return to their sect.

"Matthew, we are leaving now. Take care, and we wish you good results in the re-election of the Martial League!"

Matthew couldn't help but smile and shook his head. "Alright, stop joking. Have a safe journey, and we'll see each other again next fall."

As he waved his hand, someone suddenly shouted from the crowd. "Roland, you promised to give me the herbs you promised. Remember to have someone send them to me."

"And mine too, Roland. Don't forget my Echinacea plant!"

"Me three. You promised me some of the exquisite tea flowers you have treasured. I will personally come to collect them!"

After everyone listed various medicinal materials, Roland was completely confused. "What's going on? When did I say I would give you guys these things?"

One should know that everything they mentioned was his grandfather's treasure.

Kenneth would throw a fit if he were to give any of them away. But just as Roland was feeling puzzled, everyone took out pieces of paper with written promises of herbs, each signed by Roland with a big handprint.

What's this?

Did I do this while drunk?

With that thought in mind, Roland felt something terrible was going to happen. However, upon closer inspection, he was pleasantly surprised because the papers did not specify the exact time of delivery.

Thank goodness, there is still room for maneuver!

"Don't worry. I will fulfill what I promised you. Once I have everything prepared, I will personally deliver them to you individually."

As for when they would be ready, it was up to him to decide.

Everyone's faces were filled with joy when they heard this.

Who would turn down free precious herbs?

"Thank you, Roland. Well, goodbye, everyone, and take care!"

Once they were done fooling around, it was time to say goodbye. As the figures left one by one, only Roland, Easton, and Lola remained.

"Matthew, come with me!" Before Matthew could reply, Helen grabbed him and Sasha before walking straight out of the courtyard.

"What's going on with Mom? She's dressed so formally..." While walking behind his parents-in-law, Matthew whispered to Sasha, who shook her head in confusion.

"I don't know. My dad said they're going to meet their old friends from Bainbridge."

With that said, Matthew immediately got the gist of the situation.

Helen wanted to bring him along to show him off. It was said that once someone became a parent, their children would become the main object of comparison.

When the family arrived at their reserved private room in the restaurant, they heard someone speaking from inside before even entering the room.

“Mom, what’s the matter? There’s still a lot of work to be done at the hospital. I might get points deducted from my probation evaluation if you suddenly call me away like this.”

While the young man was complaining, Matthew and his group opened the door and entered.

The noblewoman in front of the round table immediately stood up. “Helen, I was worried sick about you. We rarely contacted each other after I married and moved to Bainbridge.”

While the noblewoman spoke, she quickly approached Helen and immediately held her hand without saying a word. However, her gaze would unintentionally move onto Matthew, Sasha, and James behind her.

With just a glance, a hint of satisfaction flashed in her eyes. “Come. Please take a seat... Helen, Thermania Restaurant is the most popular restaurant in Bainbridge, and we probably wouldn’t have been able to make a reservation if it weren’t for our family’s connections! Of course, the dishes here are the best in Bainbridge. We must enjoy them today.”

Ursula Goergen and Helen grew up in Eastcliff and had always secretly compared themselves to each other. But when Helen married into the Cunningham Family, Ursula also found her other half, and they gradually grew further apart, but their competitiveness from before never faded.

It wasn’t until Helen received a wedding invitation sent from Bainbridge that she finally heard about Helen.

Meanwhile, Ursula immediately invited Helen over upon learning that Helen had come to Bainbridge.

“Waiter, you can serve the dishes now!”

After giving the order, Ursula turned to Helen and said, “The chefs here are all four-star chefs. A meal here costs at least thousands of dollars, but I’m unsure whether you’re used to the food in Bainbridge.”

Looking at Ursula’s triumphant expression, Helen felt a bit uncomfortable, but she still had to pretend to be polite.

“Speaking of my husband, it’s kind of infuriating, actually. He treats the company like his own home, and I rarely see him... Forget it. Let’s not talk about him. Let’s talk about you. We haven’t seen each other for quite some time. How have you been in Eastcliff?”

Now it was Helen’s turn to perform.

“It’s been alright. Sasha is now managing the Cunningham Group. We just opened a pharmacy, but managing these dozens of chain stores is quite troublesome.”

Every move exchanged between masters was lethal. Then, Ursula realized that she had been too hasty. But since things had gotten to this point, she could only bring out her trump card.

“All that matters is that you’re doing well. By the way, I almost forgot to introduce you. This is my son, Alphonse Gault. He works as a doctor at a general hospital in Bainbridge owned by Gallagher Medical Group.”

Besides the various alternative medicine hospitals, the Gallagher Hospital was one of the top hospitals in all of Bainbridge. Due to its foreign background, the benefits and working conditions far surpassed those of its peers. Therefore, the requirements for employment became extremely strict.

Every employee who joined the hospital had outstanding talent. So, it was truly an extraordinary achievement for Alphonse to be able to work there.

Why should he entertain them?

But regardless of his wishes, he had to maintain his mother's image. "Hello, Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham! I'm Alphonse..."

After standing up and greeting them, Alphonse's gaze fell on Matthew and his wife. When he saw Sasha, his pupils involuntarily contracted.

What a beautiful woman!

Her flowing long hair and delicate features, as well as her exquisite appearance, stunned Alphonse. Then, he looked at the man beside her, dressed plainly and rustically, resembling a commoner.

In addition, since they came in, the man had been eating with his head down, which made him look even more like a country bumpkin.

Apart from being slightly handsome, he had no other distinguishing features, but the man and Sasha's intimate interactions implied that their relationship was simple.

With these doubts in mind, Alphonse curiously asked, "Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, who are they?"

"This is my daughter, Sasha Cunningham, and her husband, Matthew Larson! Alphonse, you look quite handsome."

If judged solely by appearance, Alphonse not only had extraordinary manners but also had a handsome appearance. With his tall figure and privileged background, he was naturally the prince charming in single women's eyes. However, throughout the entire conversation, Sasha never looked at him once.

When Alphonse heard that Matthew and Sasha were married, he frowned, wondering how could such a rustic man match such a beautiful lady.

Feeling indignant, he casually greeted them, "Nice to meet you. Mr. Larson, where did you graduate from?"

Upon hearing Alphonse's question, Ursula secretly gave her son a thumbs up.

She then added, "Yeah, Matthew, what kind of work are you doing now?"

Since Matthew was forced to come here by Helen, he sat quietly on the side and played his part as a boasting tool. Also, he hadn't eaten breakfast and was already famished when they arrived around noon. So, he decided to eat alone. Even so, his presence was still noticed.

Since the other party had already noticed him, there was no escape.

"Hello, Mrs. Gault. I don't have a specific job right now, but I would spend my time helping out the patients I encounter..."

But before Matthew could finish, Alphonse cut in, "So we have in the same profession, practicing medicine and saving lives. By the way, Mr. Larson, I feel like I've seen you somewhere before!"

Upon hearing the question, Matthew simply shook his head and replied, "I don't think so. Maybe I just have a familiar-looking face..."

Matthew was very sure that this was the first time the other party had seen him. Fortunately, Alphonse didn't dwell on the topic, and although he sounded polite, he couldn't hide his contempt.

As for Ursula, she was secretly delighted to have finally found Helen's weakness.

“Matthew, this won’t do. Although Sasha manages her company, men should have their own ambition. Look at Alphonse. Although our family is well-off, all his achievements are his own.”

While Matthew didn’t care about those, Helen was anxious.

Seeing that she was about to argue, he quickly stopped her. The reason why he had never revealed his identity was simply because he wanted a few days of peace.

But his actions made Helen even more upset. She brought Matthew here just to show off, but not only did she fail to do so, but she received mockery from Ursula. It was infuriating.

On the other hand, when Ursula saw the Cunningham Family was speechless, she took the opportunity to continue, “If nothing works out, you can apply for a job at the Gault Family’s company. Your mom and I have been sisters for many years, after all. Or I’ll introduce you to a job as a doctor. But everything should be done within one’s capabilities...”

“Although it’s great that you brought the Cunninghams to live in Bainbridge, that has to be based on your financial capability.”

Since they were a family, while Ursula was mocking Matthew, she was indirectly criticizing Helen too.

“Ursula, you shouldn’t say it like that. The child has good intentions, and although Matthew doesn’t have a job yet, he has shares in the Cunningham Group. Also, because of him, our chain pharmacies could develop so smoothly,” Helen explained.

Upon hearing Helen’s explanation, Ursula covered her face with her hand. “Oh, Helen, you haven’t changed at all these years. Just face it. He doesn’t have a job. Why do you have to cover up for him? Hahaha...”

After years of competing with each other, it seemed like there was finally a winner among the younger generation.

At that moment, the door was pushed open, and when the waiter came in to serve the dishes, she couldn't help but glance at Matthew a few times.

He's so handsome!

But the more she looked at him, the more familiar he seemed.

"Mr. Stroyan! Mr. Stroyan! I have bad news!"

The restaurant manager, who was busy with paperwork, frowned. "What's all the fuss about?"

Before she could finish catching her breath, the waiter blurted out, "I-I accidentally stumbled upon the new Holy Doctor, Matthew Larson. He's in Room 666."

Upon hearing that, the manager sprang to his feet and quickly accessed the surveillance footage in the hotel corridor.

Meanwhile, back inside the private room, when the door opened again, a waiter entered with a food cart, and Helen's face suddenly turned sour. "What's going on? Wasn't all the food already served?"

"I-I'm sorry, our boss said he added some complimentary dishes for you..."

After saying that, the waiters stopped talking and served them the most luxurious dishes available at the Restaurant. There were delicacies such as premium abalone, beluga caviar, and wagyu beef.

Looking at the table full of dishes, Ursula couldn't help but smile. "Look, this restaurant knows how to please its customers. Didn't I tell you my son, Alphonse, had just joined Gallagher Medical Group? They're already trying to flatter us."

The confused waiter on the side wondered.

Who is Alphonse?

Why does our restaurant need to flatter some unknown stranger like him?

At that moment, hurried footsteps could be heard from outside the door, but the others could hear his voice before he appeared. “Holy Doctor Larson, it’s an honor to meet you. I never expected that our humble Thermania Restaurant would be privileged to serve you...”

Once those words were said, a chubby middle-aged man entered the room.

The man was none other than the owner of the restaurant, Brant Cruz.

After receiving the manager’s text, he immediately put down all his work and rushed over as quickly as possible.

When he saw Matthew, his eyes lit up even more, and he approached Matthew to shake his hands. “Dr. Larson, your presence is a glory to our restaurant. I never imagined you would visit a small place like ours!”

Of course, this was just Brant being modest.

As for Matthew, he felt slightly disgusted to be holding hands with this over-enthusiastic and greasy middle-aged man, so he calmly withdrew his hand.

Meanwhile, Brant realized his impoliteness.

After an awkward smile, he said directly, “Mr. Stroyan, bring over our best red wine. If Dr. Larson is dissatisfied in any way tonight, you can pack your things and leave...”

Only then did the Gaults finally realize the situation, especially Alphonse, who stood up in shock.

“Matthew Larson? Are you the champion of the Holy Doctor Competition?”

At this point, Matthew could only shrug helplessly. “If there’s only one person named Matthew Larson in Cathay, then it must be me...”

He didn't want to publicize his identity because he was afraid of this kind of situation. Behind the title of Holy Doctor was the support of the Sixteen Major Forces in Cathay. Therefore, he was naturally a popular commodity for those businessmen who always pursued their own interests.

No wonder Alphonse thought Matthew seemed familiar when they first met. Now that he thought about it carefully, he realized that he had seen Matthew briefly on a live TV broadcast.

But on the one hand, they were busy with their own affairs, and on the other hand, Matthew was the top prodigy in medicine. If there were no unforeseen circumstances, such a person would definitely become one of CAUMP's management-level members.

A high-profile person like that would not come to meet with ordinary people like the Gaults, so they didn't delve into this matter.

"Helen, I didn't expect you to have such an amazing son-in-law..."

After learning the truth, Ursula smiled apologetically while Helen, who had been suppressing her emotions all this while, finally found a chance to vent her emotions.

"It's not a big deal, really! How could an unemployed man like him compare to your son? If possible, I would even like you to help introduce him to a job..."

At this moment, Helen's heart was filled with indescribable joy.
