

Chapter 2375 The Top Dieticians

The role of a dietician was actually not much different from that of a physician, only that their target audience was quite different. Not all nutritious cuisines were as simple as nourishing porridge.

As long as there was a secret recipe, even an ordinary person could make it. Advanced recipes not only required the careful handling of professional dieticians, but they also had a shorter shelf life. They could not be preserved for a long time, which limited the range of people who could enjoy herbal cuisines.

Unless they came from wealthy families. Ordinary people couldn't even afford expensive ingredients and herbs. Just the exorbitant cost of hiring a dietician was enough to discourage most people.

Naturally, herbal cuisine dieticians received much less attention.

So, when Urain introduced himself, most of the onlookers looked puzzled. Only Matthew had a pleasant surprise because Urain was a master in dietary cuisines.

Most of the existing classic menus in that field were mostly written by this old gentleman. Even those classic recipes that have been passed down for hundreds or thousands of years have been perfected and revised by him.

It was not an exaggeration to say that he was the contemporary pioneer of dietary cuisine.

"I'm Matthew Larson. I have long admired Mr. Urain. It would be an honor if you're willing to be the judge."

Over ten years ago, Matthew had heard that this person had announced his retirement. He didn't expect to see Urain right here today!

Urain waved his hand gently. "Save the courtesy. I'm just an old bone with one foot in the grave. What's there to be honored about?" He patted Matthew's shoulder, showing his appreciation.

Yann had also heard of Urain's name. Even though Urain looked at him in displeasure, he still reluctantly accepted the offer.

At this moment, the crowd surged into a commotion.

"Urain, you walked too fast. How are we supposed to keep up with you?"

Several old men came to Urain's side, and Matthew was surprised to see those familiar faces. Is this for real? Is Mr. Wyatt serious about this?

Matthew had foreseen the Cunninghams driving them to the edge for the sake of the profitable secret recipe. The Cunninghams Family would never give up, so he sought help from Rhett to contact several dieticians to endorse his herbal porridge, just in case.

After all, physicians and dieticians belonged to the same field. Rhett's intervention would make the matter much easier too.

However, he didn't expect Rhett actually invited all twelve of Cathay's top dieticians to Bainbridge.

This... Is it going too far?

Matthew felt the pressure under the presence of the masters.

"If your body can't handle it, you should admit it. Not everyone can be like me. I age like a fine wine. Allow me to introduce myself. This is our new Holy Doctor."

Urain's introduction piqued the old men's interest.

"Not bad, not bad! Talented and highly accomplished in medicine? Young man, do you have a partner? I have a granddaughter who is about the same age as you. Would you like me to arrange a blind date for you?"

Huh?

Matthew was dumbfounded by the unexpected question. He didn't expect these highly respected masters to have such straightforward sides.

Standing behind him was Sasha, who knew that their identities must be extremely noble. Their extraordinary aura and her husband's attitude were enough for her to make that guess. Thus, she just stood quietly on the side without saying a word.

However, she became uneasy at the mention of that granddaughter. She walked to Matthew's side and greeted them.

"Hello, nice to meet you. I am Matthew's wife, Sasha Cunningham."