

Chapter 2556 Valentin's Good Buddy, Randolph Murray

The following day.

Taking advantage of the popularity of Emden Hall, Matthew also posted a recruitment notice.

"Emden Hall is now recruiting physicians and apprentices?"

"Let me see... Age under twenty and above twelve, no experience needed. Those with innocent thoughts and strong determination are welcome to apply. D*mn! Does this mean my baby can apply?"

After reading the notice, a middle-aged woman quickly left.

Soon, more people joined her and went looking for their children.

When the clinic reopened, Matthew was also shocked by the scene before him.

Compared to yesterday, there were even more people today.

The street in front of the clinic was filled with people from the beginning to the end.

Some couldn't wait to see Matthew for a consultation, while some eagerly brought their children, ready to apply.

"What's going on?"

Seeing this, Matthew couldn't help but ask in shock.

Grayson explained on the side, "Mr. Larson, after yesterday, everyone in Hulwin knows you defeated the three masters. Plus, all the patients gave excellent feedback after the free consultation yesterday. They all say you are a divine doctor, and word has spread to the entire Hulwin in just one night. The whole city is talking about you being the number one divine doctor in Hulwin. So, this is what happened."

While speaking, Grayson shrugged helplessly and pointed outside the gate.

Matthew was speechless.

He was too hasty! When would he have time to rest with such a huge crowd outside?

However, he had made his move, and the notice was posted outside the gate.

At this moment, Matthew could only brace himself and face it.

...

On the other side.

The Yarwood Mansion.

After receiving Valentin's invitation, Randolph Murray finished his work and rushed over immediately.

"Valentin, what's going on? Why did you invite me over?"

As he spoke, Randolph walked forward and punched him on the shoulder.

Valentin responded in the same way.

After exchanging greetings, they burst into laughter.

"You're the one to say. It's you who has been busy with the affairs of the chamber of commerce. How can you blame me for not looking for you?"

Following Valentin's complaint, Randolph laughed it off.

"I have no choice. As the Chamber of Commerce president, there are endless tasks to handle every day. Oh, by the way, on my way here, I heard there's a new alternative medicine clinic opened on South Street. Even the three masters were defeated by its owner."

Speaking of those individuals, Valentin, who was originally smiling, suddenly turned gloomy.

"Those three old fools are just figureheads who should have retired long ago. They should have peacefully stepped down, but they insist on disrupting the order of the Hulwin's pharmaceutical industry."

As he mentioned this matter, he became even more angrier.

"If it weren't for those old fools still being around, you and I would have already unified and integrated the entire Hulwin, and it wouldn't be as chaotic as it is now."

In response to Valentin's words, Randolph also expressed his dissatisfaction.

"You're right, Valentin. It's a shame that those old fools, although incompetent, still hold some influence. So, we can't directly confront them. Forget it. It's rare for us to get together. Let's not talk about these unpleasant matters and have a drink."

While he said that, he picked up his glass and clinked it with Valentin.

After drinking two glasses in a row, they felt the fiery alcohol spread throughout their bodies.

They took a deep breath, and their previously unhappy moods instantly improved.

At this moment, Randolph also curiously asked, "Valentin, you seem troubled by something. It's as if you have encountered something unpleasant. Tell me about it, and I promise to resolve it for you."

Valentin sighed first, then furrowed his brow.

"This matter is related to that Matthew. Since that kid came to Hulwin, he has been opposing me at every turn."