

Chapter 2565 Business Partners Arrive

"Onlookers watch the excitement while experts see the tricks." This saying couldn't be more accurate.

Under Matthew's skillful operation, everyone present believed that he had merely performed a simple surgery, stopping the bleeding and stitching up Randolph's wounds.

The true life-saving effect came from the herbs that he used during the treatment.

Faced with such a treasure that could grant them an extra lease on life, who wouldn't be tempted?!

At this moment, Matthew's entire focus was on Randolph.

Although he had successfully saved Randolph, there were still many follow-up treatments to be done. When passersby inquired about it, he didn't think twice and directly responded, "These herbs are no longer available, but in a little while, I will establish Lavian Pharmaceuticals. When the time comes, if any of you wish, you can purchase directly."

After saying that, he swiftly led his apprentices away.

However, what Matthew never expected was that his casual remark caused a huge storm in Hulwin.

In an instant, the news of Lavian Pharmaceuticals producing resurrection elixirs swept through the entire city.

Matthew remained unaware of all this for the time being.

After sending Randolph to Emden Hall, he immediately began the follow-up treatment.

Of course, Matthew didn't do this out of great selflessness or to repay a debt of gratitude. It was purely because, as mentioned by Stellan, Randolph might have some connection with the powerful forces in Seraphis. Leaving him alive was purely to extract useful information from him.

The prestigious name of Lavian Pharmaceuticals spread rapidly outside. And upon receiving the news, groups of herbal medicine merchants, clinics, decoration companies, and so on.

In short, all the businessmen who were previously oppressed by Randolph and didn't dare to cooperate with Matthew came knocking on his door one after another.

"Dr. Larson, it's all that d*mn Randolph's fault for what happened before. We small businesses couldn't stand up to him. Dr. Larson, can you give us another chance?"

"Yes, if it weren't for Murray, we would have sought cooperation with you long ago."

"Dr. Larson, please give us another chance to cooperate with Lavian Pharmaceuticals."

Faced with the eager gazes and pleading tone of the crowd, Matthew didn't show any signs of softening. He knew that in dealing with people like them, who were fickle and opportunistic, the more one favored them, the more they would take advantage.

After a cold snort, Matthew said indifferently, "If any of you had the slightest foresight, you wouldn't be begging on your knees today, would you? If you want to collaborate with Lavian Pharmaceuticals, that's fine. Just get approval from Ms. Shaffer."

With that, he shifted his gaze to Vivian Shaffer, who stood not far away, looking puzzled.

The people present were all shrewd businesspeople. When they heard Matthew's words and actions, they immediately understood. A large group of them then rushed to Vivian's side. However, Vivian, facing such a situation for the first time, was at a loss on how to handle it. With a plea for help in her eyes, she could only tug at the sleeve of Sasha, who stood beside her.

United as a couple, Sasha had previously managed the Cunningham Group, a major conglomerate. In this situation, she immediately understood her husband's intentions.

With a mischievous smile, she leaned in close to Vivian's ear and whispered, "Vivian, you don't need to be afraid. Straighten your back and show your confidence. Just think of them as the Yarwood scoundrels."

In a state of confusion, Vivian kept replaying Sasha's words in her mind. In an instant, her previously submissive demeanor underwent a tremendous change.

And when the group of pharmaceutical merchants pleaded earnestly, Vivian replied with a cold expression, "You can all go back. If there is a need, I will naturally contact you. Look at all of you creating such a commotion. We still have a business to operate!"