

Chapter 2607 Instructions Before Leaving Hulwin

As one of Atlas' trusted aides, he was well aware of his lord's temperament. So, without waiting for Atlas to speak, he hastily continued, "This person is the one who previously injured Mr. Leander.

"Moreover, he annihilated Valentin Yarwood, primarily by utilizing the guards of the Zedler Family of Raischester.

"Furthermore, there's a highly lucrative mine known as Warly Hill in Hulwin. According to information from our sources, if this mountain is fully exploited, it's estimated to generate over five billion in revenue."

After hearing this news, Atlas' complexion became somewhat more composed. "Since he harmed my grandson, we'll settle this with his life. As for Warly Hill, isn't the sixth prince of Montiria in need of funds to arm his men? Pass this information along to him."

Atlas then knocked on the table before him and inquired, "What about Randolph Murray? Wasn't he sent here as an observer from the neighboring province? How is it that there's no news about him, even after Valentin's complete demise?"

"About that... Randolph Murray's whereabouts are also unknown. We can't establish contact with him at all."

On the other side, when Matthew returned to the Feather Guards training base, aside from those children who were severely injured like Danny, the others had already resumed their training. After receiving Matthew's exclusive martial arts techniques, these children's abilities started to improve rapidly. Even their instructor, Evander, had grown significantly stronger.

"Greetings, Mr. Summit Warden!"

Matthew simply waved his hand in response to the formalities.

"How are they doing?"

Evander naturally understood what Matthew was asking. "They are a group of promising talents, even though their natural martial talents may be slightly lacking. However, they are all hardworking, and not a single one has dropped out during training. With your martial techniques, Mr. Larson, I believe that once they all grasp the basics, it won't be long before they can open up their dragon ridge."

As he spoke, Evander's eyes gleamed with excitement. He had never expected that there would be such a miraculous martial technique in the world capable of improving one's martial aptitude. While the 'Divine Skill' was profound and difficult to comprehend, in just a few days of practice, Evander had noticed a gradual improvement in the natural talents of the children in the reserve.

Matthew nodded with satisfaction. Once the children opened up their dragon ridge, they could be considered true martial practitioners.

"That's good then; it wasn't in vain that I put in the effort," Matthew replied. "By the way, Captain Calloway, Hulwin has stabilized now, and its development is on the right track. In a few days, I might have to go to Seraphis."

Evander's expression changed in response. "In such a hurry, Mr. Larson?"

"Yes, with Valentin's death, those who considered Hulwin a forbidden fruit will undoubtedly make their move. I need to go investigate," Matthew explained. He then shifted his gaze to the Feather Guards who were training. "I'll leave them in your hands."

Evander immediately bowed respectfully. "Mr. Larson, please rest assured; I will share my knowledge with them wholeheartedly. By the way, Mr. Larson, if you go there, please be careful. The farther Seraphis is from Cathay, the less control the Martial League has. According to confirmed reports, places like Skargness and Southaven have a significant amount of firearms."

Matthew had heard about this from Valentin before his death, and he had also personally experienced the power of firearms on his way to Raischester. Therefore, he took this matter very seriously.

"This is something I'm most concerned about," Matthew replied. "Before setting out, I will apply for permission from headquarters to use firearms. Relying solely on melee weapons can put us at a disadvantage. If I receive any information, I will inform you immediately."

At that, he patted Evander's arm. "Alright, once I leave, the management of Hulwin will be fully entrusted to you and Mr. Warrington. Remember, if you encounter an uncontrollable situation, prioritize your own safety!"
