

Chapter 2634 The Standoff Escalates

With Arabella's yell, the guests who had already retreated a considerable distance suddenly felt their hearts race. It was about to turn into a fight; they needed to run!

The whole scene descended into chaos! Believing that Matthew's side was about to open fire, all the guests scrambled to flee the scene. Even the forces of the Stubber and Perryvall families quickly withdrew to the side at the signal of their respective patriarchs.

Arabella, watching Matthew's back, brimming with hatred, thought, Shoot! Just let this man die, and my revenge will be complete!

Meanwhile, Asher, not far away, finally came to himself. The f*ck, is this woman trying to get herself killed?! No, wait, that's Matthew Larson, the one who injured Leander! Sh*t, what a rare opportunity!

With this in mind, Asher immediately pulled out his phone and frantically summoned his men. Matthew was on the Keller Family's hit list. If Matthew were killed by stray gunfire, Asher's people would come to collect the body. If he survived, they'd go for another attempt. A sly, self-congratulatory smile crossed Asher's face for his cunning plan.

As for the standoff between Enzo and Matthew at the heart of the storm, rifles were all loaded, waiting for the respective leaders to give the command, and then the flames of hell in their hands would turn the opposing side into a pile of mud.

In this incredibly tense moment, the situation depended on the combat skills of their respective subordinates. Just one person opening fire would surely result in heavy casualties on both sides.

With Arabella's sudden appearance, the tension in the situation reached its peak. Amid the chaotic sounds of fleeing guests, there was only the faint sound of the sea breeze rustling their clothes.

The mixture of multiple factions plunged the scene into unparalleled chaos.

Enzo wasn't sure about Arabella's identity, and he was also uncertain whether this talk of a sniper threat was genuinely set up by the Stubber and Perryvall families. Astutely, the two patriarchs had the same thoughts, unsure if the other party had orchestrated this threat.

Matthew was the only one with a clear view, and he looked at the panicked Arabella and asked calmly, "Who are you?"

"What do you mean, Mr. Matthew? Didn't you ask me to check the security around here?" Arabella purposely mentioned Matthew's name to lend credibility to her words in this oppressive atmosphere.

In this stifling atmosphere, Elara couldn't contain her fear any longer, and her emotions collapsed. She said, "Who are you? Get out of here! We don't know you," as she pushed Arabella to the ground. In the process, the coat Matthew had draped over her slipped off, revealing her again to the eyes of those present.

Enzo, harboring no thoughts, took a nonchalant glance only to be stumped when his gaze fell on the girl's chest. That butterfly-shaped birthmark seemed so familiar.

With this realization, Enzo took out his phone and dug up a long-forgotten photo. The image displayed on the screen showed a baby's chest birthmark that was identical to the one on the girl before him. Enzo was also aware that he had the same birthmark on his chest. At that moment, his mind couldn't help but flash back to the past.

At that time, he was just a runner, traveling around to make a living. During his journey through Montiria, he caught the eye of a local female server. After a series of encounters, he grew tired of her and left without saying a word.

However, that female server later contacted him again, claiming she was pregnant with his child. Initially, Enzo didn't take it too seriously, but a few months later, he finally believed it when she sent him a photo of their daughter, showing the baby's striking resemblance to him.

Then, as he rose to power and prepared to meet his daughter, all contact was lost. The mother and daughter disappeared without a trace in Montiria. The matter eventually faded away, unresolved.