

Chapter 2795 Solon Durham's Maturity

Rocco evaded Solon's question and changed the topic.

"Not much. I came here to check on your leg injury and, at the same time, discuss this matter with you. Since you have a problem with Matthew and considering his current conflict with the Keller Family, have you ever thought about causing trouble for Larson?"

Solon instinctively shook his head. "I'd rather not."

"While there are rumors that the Keller Family has the support of Druira, Matthew not only has Prince Gadel's endorsement but also the backing of the Graham Family. If I create problems for him, it will end badly. Not only will I be in trouble, but I will also have to face the Keller Family's retaliation. It's not worth it. I'd rather stay on the sidelines."

As Solon spoke, Rocco's satisfaction grew stronger.

"Not bad. You understand how to gather information and analyze the situation. You have indeed matured a lot. Indeed, as you said, there is little chance of winning against the Keller Family in this battle unless he still has some hidden cards up his sleeve. Hence, I hope you can participate and help Matthew deal with the Keller Family together."

Seeing the perplexed expression on Solon's face, Rocco offered further explanation.

"I'm not asking you to make peace with Matthew, but simply to join in and benefit from the situation. Whether you're looking to expand your influence or strengthen your resources, the downfall of the Keller Family presents a golden opportunity."

These words resonated with Solon. Despite his growing forces, he was facing resource constraints. Acquiring a significant portion from the Keller Family could greatly boost him. However, Solon remembered Matthew's warning and did not immediately agree.

"Rocco, I still need to consult my family about this matter. As you know, after the Richie Barlow treasure incident, the Durham Family's resentment towards Matthew should not be underestimated. Moreover, many people are aware of this matter."

"Indeed, that's understandable." Rocco nodded. "Alright then, it's getting late. Take good care of your injury. If you have made up your mind, take action on your own."

After saying that, Rocco stood up and prepared to leave.

"Rocco, won't you give me some advice? Last time, I acted on my own and almost lost my life in Concordia."

Deep down, Solon still hoped that the versatile Rocco could offer him some guidance in intellect and warfare. It would provide him with a sense of assurance.

"You've grown up, and there are many decisions you can make on your own. I'm not always right." As the words trailed off, the only thing left for Solon was a solitary figure walking away.

Rocco's visit this time was to advise Solon and help him expedite the issue's development. However, he also had ulterior motives, such as involving the Durham Family in this significant mess.

Little did he know that Solon had not disclosed everything to him. After he left, Solon, leaning on his cane, made his way to the study. After dialing a number and confirming details multiple times, he sought approval from the Durham Family Elder Council to get involved in the struggle for the Larson and Keller Families Consortium.

When Matthew hung up the phone, the crown prince approached with a smirk.

"Matthew, why did Solon call you?"

"What else could he do? He wants to get involved too. Although the Keller Family's share is small, it can still benefit many people. How are the reception arrangements going?"

As soon as this was mentioned, the crown prince patted his chest proudly.

"I have taken care of the arrangements. I have mobilized all the people from the Stubber and Perryvall families. You can rest assured about the reception."

Initially, he had delegated the reception affairs to the Stubber Family. However, after Tavish got wind of the matter, he eagerly approached the crown prince and begged to be involved. The crown prince saw no harm in having more people, so he let the Perryvall Family join the fray.