

Chapter 2903 Treating Sasha

Upon hearing the commotion, everyone turned around and their faces immediately lit up with joy.

"Matthew, you've finally arrived!"

"It's a pleasure meeting you, Mr. Summit Warden."

Matthew looked at the severe injuries on the crown prince's body and furrowed his brow.

"Prince, who did this to you?" Matthew asked. As he spoke, his tone became serious and a hint of killing intent flashed in his eyes.

The crown prince did not reply, but urged anxiously, "I'm fine, Matthew. Please check on Mrs. Larson. She has been unconscious for a long time."

At that moment, Matthew noticed his wife lying on the grass behind them. His smile disappeared and he quickly ran to her side.

"Sasha!" Matthew crouched down and gently reached out to touch Sasha. After a while, his nervous expression gradually relaxed.

Fortunately, it was just a depletion of vital energy, which was difficult for Paintaker to handle, but not for Matthew.

He took out the Solitary Nine Needles and carefully inserted them into various acupoints on his wife's body. Then he used his spiritual power to transfer his energy into Sasha's body.

Matthew was hesitant and worried about causing harm to his wife's body, so he extended this process and refined it while observing his wife's physical condition and controlling the input of energy little by little.

Half an hour later, he finally stopped and removed the needles. He helped his wife up gently and let her lean against his chest before draping his coat over her.

"There's nothing serious. She's just exhausted."

These words were meant for the crown prince and also for Matthew himself.

Matthew took out the Auric balm and various elixirs for internal and external injuries as he felt guilty.

"Let's take care of your injuries first. This is something I didn't handle well."

After apologizing, Matthew recounted the whole story to the crown prince and the others.

Upon hearing it, the crown prince expressed his desire to destroy Basha's Sacred Mount.

"Matthew, this is not your fault. You were also taken away by them. Sooner or later, I will turn this place into ruins. By then, they will feel insignificant and be brought down from their high horse."

From the moment Matthew was brought to Basha's Sacred Mount by Feather, Matthew lost the right to choose.

Even if he had decided not to come to the mountain, Feather would have forcibly taken him away. Once inside the mountain, Lucius would never let him leave. Even if Matthew didn't accept Lucius' guidance, they had other ways to keep him there against his will.

This was what angered the crown prince the most. "Matthew, that Lucius is just talking nonsense. He talks about understanding how to interact with others, but in reality, it's just because they are used to feeling superior, so they arrogantly believe that others should do things according to their wishes."

Matthew shook his head. "Forget it. It's in the past now."

"Try to avoid any further interaction with them in the future."

Although Matthew didn't intend to dwell on these matters, he was well aware, just as the crown prince had said, that from the very beginning, he seemed to be nothing more than a puppet in their hands. He was still being manipulated by them.

Love and grievances were two different matters; the two could not be mixed together.

If it weren't for the subsequent schemes by Lucius, Matthew would naturally appreciate Lucius' guidance.

But it was precisely because of Lucius' manipulations that Matthew couldn't return to Concordia or contact the crown prince and others, resulting in his wife falling into a coma, the crown prince and others being seriously injured, and more than a dozen people losing their lives. In terms of cause and effect, Lucius was also a link in the chain.

With the elixir given by Matthew, the crown prince and his companions swiftly regained their health, particularly with the application of the Auric balm. This balm worked like a miraculous remedy for external injuries, as the wounds started to heal visibly at an astonishingly rapid pace.
