

Chapter 170: We Cannot Coexist

Liam's gaze darkened.

"I'll find a way to make Mom accept Suzy."

"There's simply no way! Your mother is set on Sophia. Didn't you hear what she said at the hospital?"

Liam glanced towards the bedroom.

"There must be a way," Liam muttered, though he hadn't figured it out yet.

William remained silent on the line for a long while before lowering his voice.

"Just now, Sophia pulled me aside and made a suggestion. To stabilize your mother's condition, she wants to pretend to be in a relationship with you in front of your mother.

"I don't want to deceive her, afraid that one day the truth will come out, but if you insist on not breaking up with that Suzy, this is the only way to ease the situation. Think about it."

With that, William hung up the phone.

Liam stared at the screen of his phone and frowned.

Deep down, he knew there was no convincing his mother, and temporary solutions were the only way to handle the current situation.

Still, he couldn't shake off this feeling of imminent disaster.

...

Perhaps exhausted from having sex with Liam, Suzy slept soundly.

The next morning, as she gazed at the ceiling of Easter Bay, it took her a while to realize how she ended up there.

After freshening up, Suzy stepped out of the bedroom.

Liam, dressed in white loungewear, stood with his back to her, typing on his computer at the dining table, his brows furrowed slightly, seemingly engrossed in some business communication.

In the kitchen, steam rose from the almost-ready breakfast.

If only everything could freeze at this moment, how wonderful it would be?

Hearing her footsteps, Liam glanced over. "Hold on, dinner will be ready soon."

"Okay." Suzy nodded, slipping on her slippers and walking over. "Is there anything I can help with?"

"Just wait there."

She obediently sat on the other side of the dining table, resting her chin on her hands as she watched him.

Liam was truly handsome!

Back in school, she often heard female classmates privately discussing his good looks. Even in public restrooms, she'd encounter two girls arguing over having a crush on him.

She remembered it vividly; those two girls arguing fiercely, eventually placing a bet on whom Liam would ultimately accept a love letter from.

In the end, Suzy speculated that he hadn't accepted any of their letters because, as his desk mate, she hardly noticed any girls around Liam, and he always maintained a cold demeanor towards them.

It was exactly like his current icy and aloof attitude at the company.

It was really unbelievable!

This high and mighty heartthrob actually had a crush, and she was his crush!

Suzy now found everything quite absurd as if everything was a dream.

"What are you thinking about?" Liam finished his work and closed his laptop.

"I'm thinking about how popular you were in junior high."

He looked surprised, as if not quite aware of his own charm. "Not really, I didn't pay much attention to it."

"Showing off."

Liam walked over, looking serious. "I'm not showing off. However, I have something important to discuss with you."

"Okay, go ahead," Suzy said, her smile fading as she looked at him. "What is it?"

"It's about Miss Burns." Liam had thought for a long time and decided to first gauge Suzy's attitude towards Sophia.

He thought about putting up a show with Sophia in front of his mother. Even though he could easily hide this matter from Suzy, he had no intention of deceiving her.

As soon as Sophia was mentioned, Suzy's expression changed abruptly, her face tensing up immediately.

"Let me make one thing clear. Me and her, cannot coexist."

Comments

Support

