

Chapter 175: The Intensifying Threat

"Have you finished?"

"Liam! Are you really willing to forsake even your mother for Suzy?! It seems like you've been completely bewitched by her!"

He didn't respond, merely stood up and opened the office door. "Please."

Sophia was speechless.

Her expression at that moment was nothing short of spectacular! A mix of embarrassment, awkwardness, and anger flooded her face.

However, Liam remained indifferent, unwilling even to glance at her.

After Sophia left in her high heels, Liam glanced at the resignation letter on the desk, then returned to his seat and called the HR department.

"Process Mrs. Burns' resignation. Yes, she's resigning voluntarily." 1

...

Liam had expected William to visit him, so when he returned to his office after his meeting and saw William, he showed no surprise.

He was in the midst of typing a message to Suzy on his phone.

"Don't argue with your mother. Once things here are settled, I'll go talk to her."

Liam knew Grace probably didn't say anything nice when she went to see Melissa.

Therefore, Suzy couldn't handle this matter alone.

"Why are you acting like I'm invisible now?" William, feeling ignored by his son, was somewhat annoyed.

"If you're here because of Miss Burns, then there's nothing much to say. She submitted her resignation letter on her own accord."

Liam didn't force her to resign.

"Don't you know why she chose to resign?"

Upon returning to the country this time, William noticed a significant change in his son. Liam was no longer solely focused on work; now, everything seemed to revolve around Suzy.

Sophia's resignation would impact the Park Group greatly, and William didn't believe his son was unaware of that!

"I already said I didn't force her to resign."

"But when you publicly announced the suspension of her current tasks at the company because of that Suzy, isn't that similar to forcing her to leave?"

William rubbed his temples, not wanting to argue with his son at this moment, especially considering his own health issues and the need to worry about his wife's condition.

"Liam, haven't I told you? I don't want to force you to completely cut ties with that Suzy, but you need to understand what your priorities are! Sacrificing your career for a woman is foolish."

Liam realized that Sophia's actions were deliberate, designed to stir up hostility towards Suzy within the Park family circle.

Unfortunately, his parents fell for it.

"You say that because you haven't truly understood Suzy. She will undoubtedly excel in the investment banking industry in the future."

"That's because of your strong support. Otherwise, based on her abilities alone, she wouldn't have enough qualifications to work at Park Group," William dismissed Liam's argument, his tone growing stern.

"You can't agree to Sophia's resignation. Your mother doesn't know yet, but if she finds out, she'll surely get agitated again! Liam, I don't want to bypass you and directly talk to that Suzy about this. Do you understand?"

The implication of this statement was quite clear.

Liam knew his father wasn't joking. If he intervened to deal with Suzy, things would only become more complicated.

"I'll handle it myself."

"It's best that you do! Additionally, you must promise me that you won't let that Suzy get involved in the core operations of Park Group in the future!

"You can give her money and property, but don't gamble the entire future of Park Group due to your personal relationship with her."
