

Chapter 41: Take Offense At Your Reminder

In each sentence, she spoke with a casual tone, as if she were just chatting with a friend.

However, every word served as a constant reminder to Suzy about the distance that existed between her and Liam.

Sophia never asked for details after saying something, she just casually spoke, and then smoothly transitioned to the next topic.

Sometimes, it gave Suzy the illusion that she was being too sensitive.

At last, they had the contract finalized.

Suzy secretly breathed a sigh of relief and stood up. "Thank you, Miss Burns. I'll be leaving now."

"Oh, where's the hurry? Liam should be waking up soon. Let me go call him, and we can have lunch together."

Liam... waking up soon?

She paused for a moment, then heard Sophia's explanation.

"I don't know what he was up to last night. I asked him, but he wouldn't say a word! After two consecutive meetings this morning, I could see he was too tired, so I let him rest for a while."

Suzy kept quiet and thought that it was normal for Liam not to say anything!

Otherwise, how could he face his original love interest? He couldn't possibly tell Sophia that he was with another woman, and that woman was a substitute.

"I won't join you for lunch. I have something else to do. Thank you, Miss Burns."

After saying that, Suzy turned to leave.

At this moment, Sophia stopped her with a call and hurried over in her high heels.

"Well... there's something I want to say straight out as a reminder. I hope you won't be offended."

Suzy glanced at Sophia skeptically.

"You should cover those hickeys on your neck when you come to the head office. It doesn't look good."

Sophia pointed to the red marks on Suzy's neck. "You also need to use contraceptives; otherwise... neither the Park Group nor Liam will tolerate the consequences."

In reality, Suzy had intentionally concealed them with foundation. Even in the hospital, her mother hadn't noticed.

But perhaps it was a woman's innate sensitivity, and Sophia had definitely scrutinized her closely.

"Miss Burns." Suzy's voice carried a touch of coldness, her tone remained steady. "I take offense at your reminder."

Sophia was speechless.

"How about you remind Mr. Park not to leave marks on me? That would be better."

She genuinely disliked this passive-aggressive approach; it lacked substance.

Undoubtedly, Sophia was indeed Liam's original love interest —she was elegant and capable. But at least for now, Suzy was legally recognized as Liam's wife.

In terms of ethics and morals, Liam had given her the right to contest Sophia's claims.

Suzy walked out of Sophia's office with her head held high, only relaxing slightly when she entered the elevator.

Just as she arrived at the entrance of the head office, Liam's call came through.

When she answered, his voice did have a hint of grogginess, just as Sophia had described.

"Are you at the hospital?"

"No, I've planned to visit the church with a colleague," Suzy clarified, glancing at the imposing Park Group building, which made her narrow her eyes.

"Do you need something?"

"I'll be having dinner at home tonight."

"Oh, okay. Tell me what you would like for dinner, and I'll pick up the groceries on my way back."

There was a brief pause on Liam's end before he asked, "Is something bothering you? Your tone sounds off."

Suzy quickly responded, "It's nothing! I was just thinking about work a moment ago. You go ahead and focus on your tasks. I need to catch the subway and meet up with my colleague."

She ended the call and then glanced at the WhatsApp message Wendy had sent earlier.

"Suzy, I'm already at the church! I brought my cousin along. I hope you don't mind."

"No problem, wait for me, I'll be there soon."

Commented [Ma1]:

Commented [Ma2R1]: