

Chapter 239 She's Not Dead

From start to finish, Camila displayed no interest in what was being said.

Everyone, in the end, had their own secret.

Upon realizing that Camila was collected and not prone to gossip, Nelson spoke up. "Alright, I'll bring her here tomorrow."

"I'll make all the arrangements beforehand. She'll be the first to take the exam in the morning. I know your worries so I'll make sure she doesn't come into contact with too many people," assured Josiah.

"Thank you for your assistance." Nelson rose from his seat and Josiah escorted him out.

Josiah returned promptly.

Nevertheless, Camila didn't ask any further questions.

With a satisfied nod, Josiah queried, "Aren't you curious?"

Camila replied, "I am but I also know that I shouldn't pry into other people's business."

Josiah grinned, opening a drawer and retrieving a patient's file, which Camila had put away during her last visit.

Camila's eyes widened upon seeing the file.

The patient in this file bore a striking resemblance to Isaac's mother.

Was the woman in the conversation between Josiah and Nelson the same one as in the file?

The last time, she had only focused on the photo but overlooked the illness.

"What's wrong with her?" Camila inquired.

"She's not sick," replied Josiah.

"What?" If she wasn't ill, then why was she at the hospital?

Furthermore, there were medical records.

However, this particular medical record wasn't saved on the hospital computer; only Josiah had a copy.

"It's their private matter. I can't casually disclose it to you. Don't pry," Josiah warned.

"I understand." Camila nodded in agreement.

"Go check the CT room and find out who's on the morning shift tomorrow. By the way, you have an operation this afternoon."

"Okay," Camila acknowledged.

She slipped her hands into the pockets of her white coat and headed to the CT room. There, she noticed Robin and Stevie walking toward the in-patient department while chatting.

They must be visiting Gunter at the in-patient department, Camila surmised.

Overhearing them discussing Isaac, Camila discreetly positioned herself around the corner and listened in.

"Isaac went to Faymoor and just returned yesterday. Sir, do you think Cathy could still be alive?" Stevie was skeptical. "No one in her family survived. Perhaps it's a woman who resembles Cathy."

"Who knows? Realistically, she couldn't still be alive. Maybe, as you said, she's just someone who looks like Isaac's mother, and they have no connection," Robin replied.

He didn't seem too concerned about Cathy's fate either way.

"Fortunately, Travis was saved. Despite Isaac depleting the company's finances, there's still hope," Robin continued.

"Yes, if Isaac hadn't agreed to the deal, the company would have been finished this time and Travis would have ended up in prison with a massive debt," Stevie lamented.

"Well, before Audrey began her sentence, the divorce papers for her and Gunter were finalized. Now Audrey is no longer a Johnston. Her family has gone to retrieve her remains," Stevie informed.

Robin didn't offer any response upon hearing this.

The Johnston family was now in shambles and their downfall was inevitable.

"I have high hopes for Travis. I pray he succeeds," expressed Robin. Travis was Robin's only hope.

Isaac possessed the ability.

However, he refused to work for the Johnston family any longer.

Given the present circumstances, there was no way to turn things around.

The situation was irreparable.

"Is it possible to discharge Gunter now?" inquired Stevie.

"Most likely," responded Robin, who thought of his two sons - one dead and the other disabled.

"It's all my fault," lamented Robin, blaming his own decision for the misfortune.

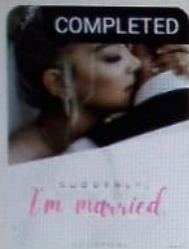

"It's not your fault," Stevie tried to console him.

They began to walk away slowly and Camila emerged from the corner.

Was the Cathy they'd referred to Isaac's mother?
