

154 A peculiar class [BONUS]

"I had some errors to correct in my base, Your Majesty," Kayden maintained the highest level of politeness in all his sentences and actions. 1

"What's your path?" After seeing how Kayden manipulated his mana and the performance he gave at the academy test, it was obvious that the boy had found his path.

"Monarch of mana", the boy didn't mind handing over his path to others. In the end, if someone was better than him at something he developed, it was just a sign that it wasn't his true path.

"I understand, you can start using the imperial library as soon as you want", Kayden still didn't have time to use the library he didn't even go back to find out where it was.

Even though it was a completely new path for the king, he didn't feel compelled to ask more about it.

"Thank you, Your Majesty," before Kayden could say anything, Locke fell to the ground unconscious, it seemed like the heart process had come to an end.

Then, the boy's body began to release various impurities in the form of a foul-smelling black goo, it was very similar to the one that Kayden released during his advances, the only difference was in the quantity that was coming out.

It was just a minimal volume, Kayden quickly made the connection with the fact that the boy had undergone several rituals to strengthen and purify his body when he was a child, probably using rare and unique materials that only a prince would have access to.

A few minutes later, this whole process ended and the king gave Locke a warm water bath using a floating ball of water, in addition to burning the impurities and changing all the air in the room using basic fire element magic.

"See you later, Kayden," the king picked up his son with a hand of mana and flew out the window, Kayden didn't even have time to respond before the man disappeared into the horizon.

Shrugging, the boy began to test the limits of his new rank, it didn't even take a few hits for Kayden to freeze in shock.

"I can't qualify anymore", he no longer had a comparison to place his level, not even his old self using transcendence at its maximum would come close to the level he was at now.

Probably not even using transcendence at the ninth rank could he match the same strength, slowly but effectively the boy was building a cultivation capable of breaking any existing barrier.

Another thing was that transcendence had become useless in his body at this point, his veins were so strong that just overloading them didn't increase any real gains in his performance.

Only by using his path combined with transcendence could he hope to see any real results, but this was something he did not want to test all the time, mainly because of the wear and tear generated by this.

Even acceleration became useless to him, but that was something he already expected it lasted much longer than he thought possible, acceleration was just a basic spell that could be used effectively from the 3rd to 6th level of the realm of apprentice.

On the other hand, his concentrated beam spell and Pop flash had a considerable increase in performance, mainly because of the amount of mana he could allocate to them now.

"I need to change my spells," Kayden quickly came to this conclusion after some thought.

"Kayden, stay a little after class", Sasaki's voice woke the boy from his reflection. The boy just responded with a nod and waited for everyone to leave.

"I see you haven't chosen any style yet, do you have any of your own?" Kayden nodded and, at Sasaki's request, began demonstrating the technique he had been refining for years.

His display was impressive and once again Sasaki observed how Kayden seemed to have his movements connected without loss of strength or speed. The first time he observed it was at the city championship when the boy fought against three knights.

"She's not 100% polished yet, but it's enough," Kayden made a confused face, what was it enough for?

"I have a special room, show up there at 7 pm every day, you don't need to come to that class anymore."

Kayden received a paper with an address written on it. Additionally, Sasaki gave a small bracelet with a katana hanging from it. According to the old man, this was so the boy could be identified when entering the building.

After a few minutes where Kayden answered some questions, the two said goodbye. The boy continued his classes for the day normally and alchemist and make money from it, but if he ended up trapped in a forest or lost in non-human areas, alchemy, combined with his knowledge of plants, would be extremely useful.

Other than that, Kayden also greatly increased his experience with unarmed combat. Beating Arthur every day was starting to take effect. Other than that, his cultivation continued to increase more and more.

"You want to buy our restaurant and keep the same staff? What's the point in that?" Kayden stood in front of a pot-bellied, middle-aged man wearing a wrinkled chef's outfit.

"I will pay your debts and buy the restaurant. My reasons are private." Even without the man understanding the reason for the boy's actions, this was too good a deal for him to pass up.

Even more so considering that the boy promised that all the profits would stay with them; they just had to meet certain requirements and maintain the business stable for a few years. 2

"I accept your deal." With the man's confirmation, Kayden took a contract out of his pocket; It contained some very simple things to understand.

I will pay all the establishment's debts and buy the restaurant at the current market value.

No one can talk about the second contract; breach of contract results in death.

The second question created a warning sign in the man's head, but as Kayden promised that no one would be forced to sign the second, he became calmer and, without thinking much, signed the contract.

Then Kayden took out another contract from his pocket and showed it to the owner; this time, the man was sure he was getting into something big.

Report useful information from nobles and anything like that.

Collect information from Academia Sol students who visit the establishment; any information should be noted and passed on to Kayden.

"If you and your team don't sign, you will only be fired and I will replace you with other people", Kayden's tone turned cold when he saw the hesitation in the man's eyes.

"No! You can leave it to us." The man knew that this was a golden opportunity and that this job had its risks, but they were few compared to the advantages that Kayden represented.

After a few more minutes, all the smallest details about the store and how the information should reach Kayden were agreed with the owner. As soon as the boy left, he saw that the sun had already set; Without thinking much, he called a car to his mansion.
