Mr. Kane Got Blacklisted Chapter 1579 [Eleven Jewell]

Sophia found herself in the line of fire as soon as her identity was exposed.

Regardless of being an adopted child or as “@ShilohTalks,” her actions of manipulating public opinion with her influence to gain online attention had made many people despise her.

Even worse, she was also the person who had benefited from the kindergarten incident earlier.

She was the person who knew every detail of the incident, yet she spread false information online to make false accusations against others.

So, after Ethan exposed her, her personal information, such as her ID number, phone number, personal photos, and home address, was dug up and shared online.

Her phone was bombarded with notifications on the afternoon Ethan terminated her contract with him.

People even recognized her on the streets and insulted her in her face. In just one day, Sophia had become someone that everyone hated.

She did not dare to go outside or even order takeaways. She worried the delivery person might recognize her and expose her current address.

When Aldor came to give her a new SIM card and food, Sophia appeared even worse than the days before. He knocked on the door for several minutes, and Sophia only opened it after confirming that it was not someone else multiple times.

“Use this SIM card to contact me for now. Things will get better once everything cools down a little.”

Sophia was starving and paid no attention to what Aldor said. She snatched the bag of food and tore open a bag of bread before devouring it.

Aldor could not help but feel a sense of pity as he watched Sophia wolfing down the food.

Although she had done something wrong, what she was going through was incredibly harsh on her.

Aldor saw her face turning red from choking on the bread, grabbed a water bottle, and handed it to her. Sophia snatched it over and chugged half a bottle to wash down the bread in her throat.

Then, Aldor asked, “I’ve done what you asked. Can you tell me who was the person who gave you the note now?”

With her disheveled hair, Sophia glanced at him, “Divert the public’s attention from me, find me a job, and I’ll tell you.”

Aldor’s face darkened, “Ms. Jewell, what we initially agreed on was that I’d help you terminate the contract with Ethan, and you’d tell me who it was. Are you breaking your promise now?”

Sophia scoffed, “You did help me terminate the contract, but why didn’t you clean up the mess he made? That scum exposed my personal information, and now I’m being doxed and scolded everywhere. I can’t even find a job. How am I supposed to live?”

“I only promised to terminate your contract for you. As for what Ethan would do, it has nothing to do with me. I can’t possibly predict what would happen.”

“Sort it out for me then. Otherwise, give me five million, and I can tell you too.”

With a sly grin, she added, "Five million is just a pocket change for Keegan. I'm sure he'll be more than willing to spend it."

Aldor stared at the woman in front of him, and his gaze turned indescribably dark. He was ashamed of himself for feeling that sense of pity toward her earlier. Some people just never change. They might seem very vulnerable in their downfall, but their greedy nature reveals itself once they have leverage.

"Mr. Kane is not going to pay you anything," Aldor's voice turned cold.

Sophia opened another pack of bread, "Well, there's nothing I can tell you then."

Aldor continued to stare at her for a few more seconds.

Then, he suddenly grabbed her wrist and forcefully pulled her off the sofa before dragging her toward the door.

Sophia was startled and did not know how to react as she was dragged.

Aldor had always given others the impression of being gentle and polite, always putting a warm smile in front of everyone. This led to Sophia thinking that she could take advantage of his seemingly kind nature.

However, the fact that Aldor could stay by Keegan's side for so long meant that he was no ordinary man. He was just someone who preferred to do things the peaceful way before resorting to the hard way.

Sophia recollected herself and started struggling, "What are you doing? Let go of me!"

Aldor replied coldly, "Ms. Jewell, it seems you've forgotten who provided you with this place to stay. If I can't get the information I want from you, there's no need for me to treat you nicely."

As he spoke, he opened the door and shoved her out.

Sophia had not expected Aldor to do anything like that, and she was shocked,

“Don’t you want to know who gave me the note?”

Aldor said indifferently, “I’ve told you I can find out who that person is even if you won’t tell me. It’s just going to take me more time.”

Then, he threw her luggage out, too.

After realizing Aldor was serious about kicking her out of the house, she panicked and said, “I can’t even get in contact with that person now. How are you going to find that person without even knowing anything?”

“Let that be my concern.” Aldor looked at the time, “Leave now before it’s too late. Otherwise, I’ll have the security involved.”

Sophia’s expression changed as she gritted her teeth and said, “One million, I’ll tell you who it is for just one million!”

Aldor dialed the property management’s number, “Hello, a strange woman had barged into my home...”

Ten minutes later, the security guards escorted Sophia out of the residential area as she cursed under her breath.

Of course, Aldor was not going to give up just like that. He knew people like Sophia too well. He understood that they would never talk if he appeared too eager. Once they realized how valuable the information they held was, they would keep using it to their advantage.

Aldor would never give her a chance to do so. Not only did Sophia have no money, but her reputation was also tarnished. He figured it could not take long for her to return to him, and then he could gather the information he needed.

Sophia had nowhere to go, so she tried calling Ian.

Ian saw Sophia’s call and sneaked a look at the woman sleeping next to him. He quietly got out of bed before answering the call.

“Uncle, I need some money.”

Sophia went straight to the point.

Ian furrowed his brows, “Didn’t I just give you ten thousand earlier? Why do you need money again?”

Sophia sobbed and said, “The debt collector took that ten thousand away from me long ago. Uncle, you’ve got to help me.”

All Ian felt was annoyance. After Hylda and Albert were both caught, Sophia frequently called him to ask for money. After all, they were relatives. He also felt guilty for betraying Hylda, so he gave Sophia more than a hundred thousand.

However, the interest on Sophia’s debt kept piling up like a bottomless pit. He was merely a plaything for Irene; there was no way he would have enough money to repay Sophia’s debt.

So, he decided to tell her the truth, “I’m not your uncle. I’m not biologically related to your mother.”

Sophia was taken aback, “What did you say?”

“Don’t you understand? Hugo Jewell is my son. Who do you think I am to your mother?”

“The name Ian White was simply an excuse for us to have an affair.”

Sophia’s mind was blown. She had visited Hylda several times, yet she had never mentioned anything about this.

She finally knew why Ian was so eager to distance himself from the Jewell family after they got into trouble.

“I still have ten thousand dollars left, and I’ll transfer them to you in a while. I’m only doing this because your mother supported me financially back then. All the best to you, and don’t call me ever again.”
