Mr. Kane Got Blacklisted Chapter 1801 [Eleven Jewell]

“Oh my, young people these days are so bold and daring. I can’t believe they’re hugging in such a crowded public area. Wait- That doesn’t look like Jaylene,”

Claire stated.

“S-Stella?” she uttered as the woman lifted her head.

Didn’t Dahlia say that Keegan and Stella have broken up? She told us that he and Jaylene were building a bond. What is going on???’ Since returning to Cordelia’s residence, Dahlia had gradually become active in her previous social circle. Although she wasn’t as warmly received as before due to her previous downfall, the affluent wives in Rivera couldn’t completely ignore her. After all, she was still the biological mother of the Kane family heir.

The Kanes would not completely abandon her due to her ties to the family.

Indeed, shortly after Keegan’s incident, Dahlia returned to the Kane family and regained her status.

Dahlia had spread the news about Keegan wanting to annul his engagement with Stella. She also told people about how he was getting close to Jaylene and that they were going to get married. People were puzzled about why he would leave the Sauns’ legitimate daughter for someone else, but they kept silent, thinking Dahlia would know the situation better.

They were discussing when Keegan should propose to Jaylene when they saw Keegan intimately embracing his ex- wife in the bustling mall.

“Why does it seem like you have been misinformed, Dahlia? I heard Stella has moved back to Royalpark Villa,” Olivia chuckled and teased.

She was not the only one who had heard the news.

However, Dahlia had deliberately avoided the topic and kept praising Jaylene.

So, the ladies did not bring the matter up.

Only Claire was naive and trusting to believe Dahlia's words without question.

"She's shameless! Why would she insist on living with Keegan when he is about to annul their engagement?!" she exclaimed.

Olivia laughed and said, "Claire, Mrs. Kane Sr. was the one who arranged for Ms. Hall to live with Keegan. Ms. Hall agreed out of duty to help Keegan recover his memory. As heiress of the Saun family, she has everything she needs. Why would she need to latch onto another family? What could she possibly gain?"

Approval? Criticism?"

These words hit a nerve for many of the ladies present. Despite their glamorous appearance, only they knew what goes on behind closed doors.

Even those who had once helped their husbands build successful careers found themselves in a disadvantaged position once detached from the workplace.

Their economic status determined their family status. Living within their husbands' social circles meant being dependent on them.

In case of any disputes, their husbands could argue that they're providing for their wives.

Like the others, Claire was among those affected, and the comment left her uneasy.

Dahlia glanced at Olivia and calmly said, "Your information is indeed accurate.

But as you said, she's there to help him with his memories, not to be in a relationship with him."

'They're literally hugging,' thought Olivia.

She smirked, pretended to be shocked, and asked, "Dahlia, haven't you seen Keegan's recent post on social media?"

"What post?"

“No wonder you don’t know,” Olivia said, lowering her voice.” Keegan recently clarified his relationship with Jaylene. He stated that he considers her a sister then, now, and forever.

This revelation echoed in the ears of everyone present, eliciting various reactions. They were puzzled about Dahlia’s thought process after knowing she had fabricated the relationship between Jaylene and Keegan.

Dahlia’s expression shifted as she swiftly pulled out her phone to see what Olivia was talking about. Keegan’s social media appeared empty.

Before Dahlia could grasp the situation, Olivia widened her eyes and said, “That’s odd. The post is here on my end. Did Keegan block you from his account?”

With that, the group of affluent wives had a different opinion of Dahlia. The reconciliation between mother and son seemed more complex than Dahlia portrayed. The fact that Olivia could view Keegan’s posts but not Dahlia raised suspicions.

Dahlia was embarrassed. Keegan rarely posted on social media, so she hadn’t found it odd that she didn’t see his posts. Now, she realized she might have been blocked.

The ladies exchanged glances, silently acknowledging a newfound understanding.

Clenching her fists, Dahlia remained silent and headed toward the exit. Claire, somewhat slow to comprehend, thought about her husband’s instructions and hurriedly followed, “Dahlia, aren’t we going for afternoon tea?”

Olivia sighed softly as she observed Claire and saw a reflection of her past self.

However, Claire was fortunate. Her husband, though not exceptionally bright, was a decent man. He did not mind bowing to wealthy ladies like Dahlia if it meant it would make their lives easier.

“Olivia, I heard your husband got promoted. Congratulations, ” said one of the ladies in the group.

The others followed suit. “He truly owes his success to you, Olivia. As they say, there’s a woman behind every successful man.”

“Your husband is a loyal and well-mannered man. He talks about you every time he sees us. A man who cares for his wife is destined for a smooth career,” another added.

“His promotion must be bringing in good fortune. You’re glowing, Olivia. You even look younger than me.”

“That’s because her spirits are high in times of joy.”

The flattering comments echoed, and Olivia responded with a faint smile.

Stella’s words rang true; this circle was exceptionally hypocritical. They circled around whoever had higher wealth and status.

Once, Olivia had envisioned how she would rise to prominence in this circle after her husband’s success. However, now that she was in that position, she felt surprisingly calm.

She had the power to elevate her foolish husband, but she also had the means to bring him down. She would ultimately rely on her abilities to establish herself in this social circle.

The ladies claimed Stella was lucky to be born into the Saun family. However, they didn’t realize she had put in a lot of work to build up The Velvet in a short time.

‘If anything, Jaylene is the lucky one. She got to enjoy all the privileges of being the Sauns’ daughter despite having no blood relation to Wenham,’ thought Olivia.

Jaylene excelled in arts and culture but fell short in practical matters.

On the other hand, Stella had learned valuable lessons during her twenty-five years with the Jewell family. She understood the importance of practical success, so she ventured into untapped markets, expanding beyond the luxuries Jaylene was accustomed to
