Mr. Kane Got Blacklisted Chapter 1809 [Eleven Jewell]

After all, in high-society families, the collective interest of every member always came first.

As Dahlia thought about that, her expression relaxed." Alright then. Find a reason to move into the Royalpark Villa and seek the right moment. Also..."

Dahlia lowered her voice as she continued, "Keep a close eye on Keegan and Stella. See if he really treats her coldly as rumored."

"I got it," Aurora affirmed.

Dahlia picked up the glass of collagen drink from the table and handed it to Aurora, instructing, "Drink it.

"Staying there longer will make Stella drop her guard. It's crucial that no one suspects your involvement."

Aurora took a sip of the collagen drink and asked, "Mom, is it true that Jackson is unrelated to Keegan's case?"

Dahlia paused momentarily before saying with a cold expression, "Would the police release him if he were involved? Stella is the sole reason Keegan was kidnapped. If she hadn't interfered with Marshall, the kidnappers wouldn't have mistaken Keegan for him. Stella is a troublemaker, and nothing good has come to Keegan since being with her."

Switching her tone, Dahlia continued, "Chandler would never let Jackson off if he were involved. He cares for you the most. You know how he treats us."

Aurora did not ask any more questions and slowly finished the rest of the collagen drink.

The next morning, Keegan went to the office. Stella received a call from Trevor, asking about how she had been.

"I'm good. Keegan can't bully me at all. I'm the one bullying him." Stella laughed and told Trevor about what had happened in the past two days.

Trevor patiently listened to Stella's chatter, sensing her contentment living with Keegan, which put him at ease.

"By the way, about the person you wanted me to look into, my friend is currently assisting me with the investigation. Once I'm back, we should have some information about them."

"Okay," Stella acknowledged before inquiring, "Trevor, the person you planned to meet... Have you met her yet?"

"She's occupied today and scheduled to see me tomorrow afternoon. Let's wait another day. It'll give us more time to prepare everything you need, and we can address everything at once."

Stella chuckled softly. "Trevor, it doesn't matter if everything isn't perfectly prepared. Let's focus on what's more important. Remember to inform me when you return. I'll come to pick you up."

"Sure."

As Stella spoke, she heard some clanging sound downstairs. Then, she hung up the phone and went to check it out.

When she went downstairs, she saw Aurora standing in the living room, directing a few people to move things into the house.

"What are you doing?"

Stella's voice startled Aurora, who turned to face her with a cold gaze. "Are you blind?"

Then, addressing the maid, she asked, "Maria, which room upstairs is vacant?"

Maria was confused. "Mr. Kane did not say that you're coming over to stay.

There aren't any available beds upstairs. IV "Is there no bed, or is someone intentionally preventing me from staying here?"

Aurora swept her gaze across Stella as she spoke.

Stella furrowed her brow and questioned, "Who gave you permission to stay here?"

Aurora laughed upon hearing that. “Stella Hall, this is my brother’s house. I can stay here whenever I want, for as long as I want. You’re not my sister-in-law.

Who are you to stop me?”

She then shifted her gaze away and went upstairs to look for a room.

Of course, Maria did not lie to her. Except for the master bedroom, the rooms other than the one where Stella lived did not have beds.

Aurora systematically opened each door until she reached the guest room where Stella stayed. With a chuckle, she remarked, “I knew there would be a bed here.”

Then, addressing the individuals handling the suitcases, she instructed, “Bring my belongings inside.”

Maria promptly intervened, saying, “Ms. Kane, this is Ms. Hall’s room.”

Aurora halted for a moment, then asserted, “Maria, are you thinking straight?”

Every room in this house belongs to my brother. Who is she to have a room here?”

She pointed at the room as she spoke, “Throw her things out now.”

“Where will Ms. Hall stay if you stay here?”

Aurora started to get impatient. “What do I care? That’s none of my business!”

Maria looked at her before shifting her gaze to Stella. “Ms. Hall... I...”

Stella was surprisingly calm as she said flatly, “Maria, help me pack my things up. I’ll go out to make a call.”

“Okay,” Maria responded. Then, Stella went outside with her phone to call Keegan.

Keegan was en route to the meeting room when he noticed Stella’s call. He paused and informed Aldor, “You head in first. I need to take this call.”

Aldor acknowledged and proceeded ahead.

Stepping aside to a quieter area, Keegan answered the call. Stella's voice emerged from the other end, "Keegan, did you invite Aurora to stay in your house?"

Keegan furrowed his brow. "Is Aurora at the house now?" Stella sounded surprised. "You don't know?"

"She didn't inform me. Why is she there?"

Stella's tone hardened. "How would I know? She took my room. Where am I supposed to stay now?"

Keegan checked the time and replied, "For now, stay in any room that's available. I'm about to start a meeting. We'll discuss it later."

"Any room?" Stella asked calmly, "Any room will do, right?"

Aware that the meeting was imminent, Keegan agreed without much consideration, "Yes, any room. We'll talk about this after the meeting."

"Okay then," Stella said.

Ending the call, she instructed the maid, "Move my belongings to the master bedroom."

The maid looked surprised. "Did Mr. Kane approve of this?" "You can call him to confirm."

The maid shut up and quickly helped Stella with her belongings.

Aurora stood at the door with her arms crossed, looking at Stella coldly. When Stella looked over, she slammed the door shut with a loud bang.

Stella looked away and wondered why Aurora come to stay there. 'Grandma hasn't told me about this at all. Could it be Dahlia's idea?

'What is she trying to do?' Stella was puzzled but became even more guarded against Aurora.

Their history was marred by conflict; Aurora had even faced legal consequences for a previous incident involving scalding water thrown at Stella.

Despite Aurora being aware of Stella's residence at the Royalpark Villa, her move to the house raised suspicions. Stella suspected Aurora had ulterior motives, likely connected to Dahlia's involvement.

Throughout the entire day, Stella remained vigilant, anticipating Aurora's next move. However, to her surprise, Aurora didn't make any overt attempts. She emerged only for meals when summoned by the maid, exchanged a few cutting remarks with Stella, then retreated to her room for the rest of the afternoon.

Stella remained baffled by Aurora's lack of further action, considering if she was merely biding her time for the right moment.

This pattern persisted until evening, when Keegan arrived home.

Upon entering, he spotted Stella seated on the couch, peeling an apple, while the TV aired the latest popular drama featuring Leighton.

At the other end of the couch, Aurora sat, seemingly impassive, also engrossed in the TV. The ambiance seemed tranquil, yet an odd tension lingered in the air.
