

MR. NELSON WINNING HIS EX-WIFE'S HEART

Chapter 6 Mrs. Nelson

Edmund was so familiar with Chelsea's voice. He frowned slightly and turned around. Upon laying eyes on her, his eyes shone with incredible admiration.

The crowd stopped and looked at the gorgeous woman who just went onstage and addressed Edmund. They didn't know her, but they were captivated by her grace and beauty.

Chelsea was a vision in a bright red dress, and she had a folder in her hand.

Even though there were many popular A-list female stars at the party, her appearance and temperament were not inferior to theirs.

Someone tried to stop her, but Chelsea just stepped forward, took the microphone, and told the party guests, "Hello, everyone. My name is Chelsea Williams, and I'm Edmund's wife. I have something to say to him here."

The crowd collectively gasped in shock. Was Edmund married?

They were suspicious of Chelsea's words, but seeing that Edmund just stood there with a cold expression on his face and didn't bother stopping her, they thought that maybe she was telling the truth.

But now that Edmund's real marital status had been revealed, what about Diane?

Was she Edmund's mistress?

While everyone was still recovering from the astounding news, Chelsea stood in front of them with her chin up. Then, she said with a smile, "I will cease being Mrs. Nelson soon."

The room erupted in shocked whispers once again.

Brandishing the folder in her hand, Chelsea turned to face Edmund.

Edmund started getting a bad feeling.

Sure enough, Chelsea told him calmly, "I want a divorce, Edmund. This is the divorce agreement drafted by my lawyer. Don't worry. I just want to end our marriage. I'm not after anything owned by the Nelson family."

She flashed him a wide, dignified smile and handed the folder that contained the divorce papers to him.

Edmund didn't approach to take it. He just narrowed his eyes at Chelsea and snarled, "Chelsea!"

As soon as he finished, Chelsea hurled the folder in his direction, and it almost hit him directly in the face. He could only watch as the folder bounced on his chest and then landed in front of him. He was about to explode with anger.

"I wish you and Diane happiness forever." After saying that, Chelsea turned around and started leaving the stage.

But after a few steps, she suddenly turned her face and beamed at him. "Oh, I almost forgot. Go to the Nelson Group with your lawyer to sign the divorce agreement at half past eight tomorrow morning. Please don't stand me up again."

At this moment, the audience was in an uproar.

Standing on the stage, Edmund stared at the elegant, calm woman in the bright red dress. He shot daggers in her direction with his eyes.

This woman had really stunned Edmund.

He had been in the business world for so many years, and this was the first time that he had been humiliated like this in public.

Chelsea was the first person to dare embarrass him in front of his peers and business partners.

He had been with Chelsea for three years, but he never knew that she could be this brutally assertive. Also, he didn't expect that he would find her so dazzling when she was all dolled up.

Everyone thought that Edmund would be furious and cancel the lively anniversary party right then and there. However, he simply collected himself, ordered the celebration to continue, and then went off the stage.

Everyone admired him. He had excellent emotional control. Even though his wife just humiliated him in a company event, he still acted like he wasn't shaken at all.

At the same time, everyone thought that Mrs. Nelson was magnificent and impressive.

After Edmund returned to his seat, Diane asked him with concern, "Are you okay?"

Edmund pressed his lips together and didn't say anything. Diane angrily commented, "That was very rude of Chelsea. How could she make trouble on such an occasion? Didn't she care at all about your dignity and your image?"
