

Chapter 30 He agrees to remarry

Layla went back home so she could see her mom the next day.

She felt guilty because her mom fell sick because of her.

"Is my mom home?" Layla asked one of the maids.

"Madam just came back from the hospital yesterday."

Layla nodded and walked into the living room.

She was surprised to see William Jones' parents were here.

"You're back, Layla." Mrs. Jones said.

"Mr. Jones and Mrs. Jones." Layla greeted.

Caroline then said sarcastically, "Where have you been? Luckily you still remember the way back home."

"I have work that needs to be done so I can't come back. But I heard that you are sick so I rushed back home, are you okay, Mom?" Layla asked.

"If you really care about my health, stop doing things that will make me angry then." Layla's mother said.

When Mrs. Jones told her that Layla rejected her suggestion of remarry, she almost faints out of anger.

"Since everyone is here, call William and tell him to come for lunch." Layla's mom said.

"No." Layla quickly rejected her suggestion. She doesn't want William to misunderstand her again. "He is busy and we already divorced."

"We didn't agree about that, Layla. I know everything, you wouldn't want to divorce if it wasn't Nora Alexander, right? You know both of them were very good. You don't have to worry about that."

"Mrs. Jones....." Layla wanted to tell her that this wasn't something she could decide.

William Jones will never agree to remarry her.

"As long as you like William, we can do everything for you. He wouldn't be with Nora if we don't agree." Mrs. Jones persuaded.

Nora Alexander wasn't a good woman. They wouldn't let Nora be with William.

And Mrs. Jones didn't give Layla time to protest, she quickly pulled out her phone and called William.

William arrived at Alexander's mansion by evening. Layla was standing at the balcony when William arrived. He got out of the car and tilted his head up to look at Layla.

Layla knew the reason why William was here. He was here because he doesn't want the both of their parents to be upset.

When all of them finally gathered at the dining room, Mrs. Jones said, "Why didn't you greet your wife?"

William just looked at Layla and didn't say anything. He must be blaming her.

"I'll go help in the kitchen." Layla said awkwardly.

After all the dishes were served, everyone settled down for dinner.

Layla ate quietly while listening to their parents talking. Suddenly, William placed a piece of meat on her plate and said, "Still angry at me because of what I said that day?"

"What have you done to make Layla angry?" Mrs. Jones asked.

William smiled and said, "Just a few bad words. I am apologising now."

Listening to what William said made Layla feel confused. She didn't know what was the point of him acting like a good husband here.

"You know how he can be, Layla." Mrs. Jones tried to help her son.

"Don't be angry at me." William said softly.

Him smiling at her and talking softly at her made her feel like everything was just like how it was before they divorced.

William looked at Layla and said, "I think the suggestion of remarry is good, what do you think?"

Layla skipped a heartbeat when she heard what he said.

Did he really want to remarry her?

Layla didn't know what he was planning so she lowered her head and said, "I will think about it."

William then turned to his mother and said, "See? I told you Layla wouldn't agree to remarry me, Mom."

"You really don't want to remarry, Layla?" Mrs. Jones looked at her and asked. She thought that Layla would agree to remarry.

"Layla." Layla's mom looked at her and said, "Your mother in law is trying to help you now, you should appreciate it."

"Everyone already knew we divorced. There is no point in remarry." Layla looked at William and said.

She knew he wasn't truthful with what he said and did tonight.

She doesn't want to remarry him.
