

Chapter 32 They never have sex

"I am sorry. I never thought that the news would spread so fast." William said.

"No, it's all my fault. If my mom didn't go to the hospital that day, no one will know that we divorced, right?" Layla said sarcastically.

"I didn't say that."

"Whatever. You don't have to be so nervous. I wouldn't remarry you. I have nothing to do with you anymore after the second you signed the divorce paper."

She wanted nothing to do with William Jones anymore.

William stayed quiet for a few minutes and asked, "Is that man good to you?"

Layla looked up at William's eyes and they were full of caring. He cared about how she was doing. This was the first time he cared about her after they divorced.

Layla then said, "He is good to me."

"William." A pair of familiar voices echoed.

Nora was standing outside the front yard. She was wearing a pair of white sneakers and a white long dress, looking like a goddess.

William quickly rushed to her and asked, "Why are you here? Didn't the doctor tell you to rest?"

"I went back home to see my mom and she kicked me out. I knew you were here so I thought that I could come here and meet you. Can you open the door for me, Layla?"

She was acting kind.

Layla just stood there not planning to move.

Nora then said, "I am here to see uncle and aunty. Are you still mad at what happened before? If yes, I am so sorry!"

When they were kids, Nora would sleep at Layla's house after Nora fought with her family. And now she was doing the same thing.

"Can I come in, Layla?" Nora asked.

"You should go home, Nora." William then said.

Nora can't be here. It will cause a lot of problems if she was here. William doesn't want his parents to see Nora here looking for him.

Nora then grabbed William's hand and asked, "Are you parents here? I should say hi."

"Nora, you should go home." William tried to persuade Nora.

"Why? Are you afraid that they don't like me? Even though they don't like me, I should say hi anyway. We need to face this anytime soon, right?" Nora said.

Nora knew the reason why William was here today. He was here to see Layla.

And Nora knew that William's parents hoped that William would remarry Nora. So, she needed to come, otherwise William would have been convinced by all of them.

She can't let that happen.

She knew everyone inside the house didn't welcome her, so she wanted to go in there and make William pity her. So that William wouldn't abandon her.

All she needed was William Jones and nothing more. She just has to make William stay by her side.

And with that, Nora pulled William into the house.

William's parents didn't look pleased to see Nora here. But Nora still kept her smile on anyway.

She then greeted William's parents, "Uncle, Aunty."

But William's parents didn't look at Nora.

"Mom, Dad, Nora is here to see you." William said, trying to make all of these not so awkward.

Mrs. Jones then turned to Layla and asked, "So did you guys decide to remarry?"

"William is with me now; he won't remarry Layla."

William was surprised by what Nora just said.

"Is it?" Mrs. Jones asked with anger raging in her eyes. She knew the intention of Nora coming here.

William then nodded and said, "Yes..... I am not going to remarry Layla."

Layla's mom then stood up and pointed at Nora, "What do you want, Nora Alexander? Aren't you afraid that I would tell your parents about this?"

Nora quickly grabbed William's arm and said, "My mom just kicked me out. They said they are going to disown me. I only have William now. So, please let us be together. Layla doesn't love William and she has everything."

"Nonsense! How would you know Layla doesn't love William?" Caroline asked angrily.

"They have been married for three years and Layla never got pregnant, do you want to know why, aunty?" Nora said.

Caroline didn't know what to say. She thought that the reason why they don't have a baby was because the both of them were busy.

Nora then smiled and said, "Because they never have sex before."

Comments

Gift